Hatch Act Extension Faces Senate Fight Today

Civil Service Reform League Urges Approval; Barkley Sees Passage

By William V. Nessly
Post Staff Writer

Approval of the Hatch amendment extending provisions of the "clean politics" bill to State employes paid wholly or in part from Federal funds was urged on all Senators last night by the National Civil Service Reform League.

As the Senate prepared to take up today the controversial measure to bar political activity by employes of State highway departments, social security offices and similar branches, the league declared its enactment vital "in the interest of sound Government administration and our free election system."

Harmony urgently sought for the current election-year session of Congress was endangered by efforts to enact the restrictive amendment, and, in the Walter-Logan bill, to provide a court check on the rulings and regulations issued by scores of administrative agencies.

Census Question Battle

Other battles are expected in the course of the week over questions to be asked by census takers, and over continuation of the reciprocal trade agreement program.

Senate Democratic Whip Minton, of Indiana, and Senator Lucas (Democrat), of Illinois, are to lead the fight against the Hatch amendment. Majority Leader Barkley, of Kentucky, forecasts its approval.

The Civil Service Reform League, in letters to all Senators, yesterday declared uncontrolled political activity of public employes "undermines confidence in our traditional party system of government.

"Every reason that prompted the adoption of the Hatch law in 1939 applies with equal force to the Hatch amendment," it added.

Taxpayers can hardly become enthusiastic over compensating public employes for political service rather than for faithfulness to the public itself, it said through Executive Secretary H. Eliot Kaplan.

Factional Fights Cited

"The spectacle of officers and employes in the public service wrangling among themselves in political factional fights, party conventions controlled by public employes, and political clubhouses often run by public employes, would hardly commend itself to public favor," the league contended.

"Public employes know from experience that undue partisan activity invites political reprisals. Confidence in impartial nonpartisan administration of government is greatly enhanced if public employes are kept out of partisan politics."

A fight is expected when Representative Walter (Republican), of Pennsylvania, attempts to force action on the Walter-Logan measure. Though the bill has been approved by the House and Senate Judiciary committees and a special rule has been given by the House Rules Committee, strong Administration efforts to block it have been reported.

Walter last night charged opposition to the bill came from "left-wingers—both within and without the Federal service."

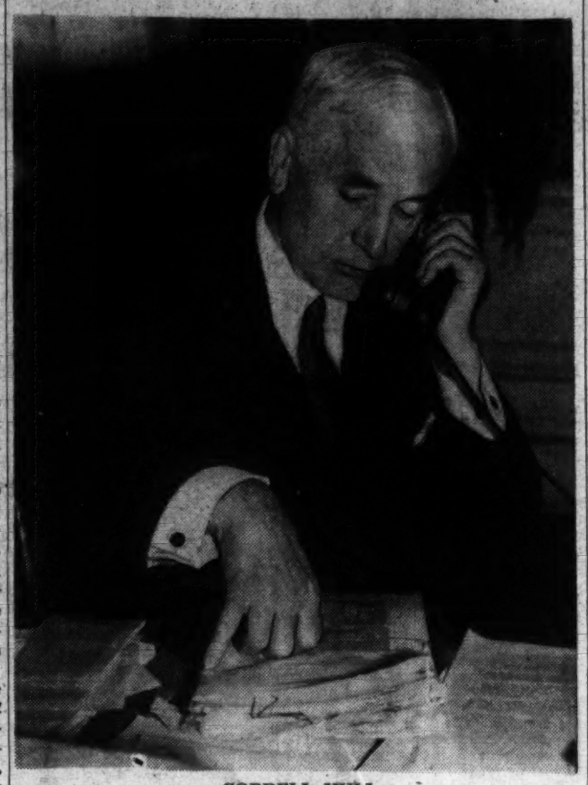
Ernest K. Lindley Says:

Roosevelt Won't Run, Hull His Candidate



CORDELL HULL
"He's safe. He can be elected."

By Ernest K. Lindley.

The first seven years are over. How many more will there be: less than one or nearly five?

Excepting the newspapermen, who have pestered him to little avail, surprisingly few people have had the courage to ask the President point-blank about his political plans for 1940 and beyond. They have tried to draw him out by indirection. They have deduced what they could from his chance remarks and general behavior. They have pumped his closest political associates and the members of his family—and received conflicting replies and hints.

Just before the President went South for his trip to Panama, however, one of the elderly stalwarts of the Democratic Party decided that he had had enough of mystery. He asked for an appointment with the President, and was granted it. This, in substance, is the conversation which ensued:

Visitor—Mr. President, I've been in Democratic politics and in Congress longer than most people, and for seven years I've gone down the line with you. Now for months I have been reading and hearing all kinds of reports about your plans. I feel I'm entitled to know what they are. So I've come here to find out directly from you what are we going to do this year? Are you going to run for a third term?

R.—No—I'm not going to run again. I'm getting tired. It's time for someone else to take over this job. Of course, if the Germans overrun England and head in our direction I won't desert the ship. But unless something like that happens, I won't run again.

V.—If you don't run, Mr. President, who is the man? Whom do you think we should nominate?

R.—Well, I think Hull would be a good man, don't you? (The President knew that his visitor is a warm friend and admirer of the Secretary of State.) He's safe. He can be elected. He would keep us out of war. And he's a lot more liberal than a lot of people around here think he is. Of course, if we nominate Hull, we'll have to pick a strong man of recognized liberalism for Vice President.

V.—Whom do you have in mind, Mr. President?

R.—There's Bob Jackson. He's able, and smart, and liberal. There's Paul McNutt. He's a capable man. And there's Burt Wheeler—another good man. And there are others. We all have our individual preferences. Of course, some of these men have disagreed with me at times, and I have disagreed with them. But that's to be expected. I think we are all trying to go in the same general direction. We have some good men to choose from and I think we can all get together on a winning ticket.

V.—You didn't mention Jim Farley, Mr. President. What about him for Vice President with Cordell Hull?

R.—You know how fond I am of Jim Farley. He's a wonderful fellow. He's done a great job for the Democratic Party. I don't know of anyone more deserving of recognition by the party. And he's done more for me politically than any other living person, not even excepting my wife. But——, I've been traveling about and talking to people from all over this country for a good many years now. You know what a lot of people down your way would think and say if we nominated Jim for Vice President. I know, too, because I've lived among them. They'd say we were using Cordell Hull as a stalking horse for the Pope.

V.—That's right, Mr. President.

R.—And lots of other people in other parts of the country would say the same thing. I'm afraid we'd stir up a lot of prejudices and emotions that would confuse the whole picture. We might even end up with another Al Smith debacle. Right?

V.—I'm afraid you're right, Mr. President. I like Jim, but we'd run the risk of stirring up unnecessary trouble by putting him on the ticket. . . . I'm mighty pleased to hear what you said about Cordell Hull.

There ends the account of the conversation.

In reporting this to a close friend, the elderly, wise, and utterly reliable visitor added: I hope he sticks by that resolution. But I'm not sure, yet. The lure of the Presidency may hold him. He looks energetic enough . . .

So ends the latest report on the exploration of the mind of the sphinx.

G.O.P. Assails Farm Record Of New Deal

Present Rate of Gain Delays 1929 Level Of Income Till 1948, Rep. Hope Asserts

Special Services

President Roosevelt, beginning his eighth year in the White House, today will attend special services at St. John's Church marking the seventh anniversary of his first inauguration. Page 2.

The Storm in Fury

Republicans on Capitol Hill last night marked the opening of the New Deal's eighth year with an attack on the Administration farm policies, centering their attention on that section in which Republican election gains have been most pronounced in the past two years.

The attack came amid Republican jubilation over announcement by Democratic Senator Donahey that he would not run for reelection in Ohio this year, an announcement which Republicans gleefully interpreted as acknowledgment that the G. O. P. will capture the Buckeye State in November.

It came also as Senate Majority Leader Barkley, of Kentucky, was defending the New Deal's seven-year record and Senate Minority Leader McNary, of Oregon, was proclaiming it a failure in a broadcast debate.

While Barkley prepared to address the Senate today in a eulogy of the New Deal's record, Representative Hope, chairman of the special farm committee of House Republicans, declared that at the rate established in the past seven years, American farmers cannot expect to regain their 1929 level of income until 1948.

Mentions Cotton, Wheat

"Farmers generally, under the New Deal formulas, cannot expect an annual income of $15,000,000,000 until at least 1958," said Hope, whose committee was selected by House Minority Leader Martin to study the agricultural problems.

"Under New Deal panaceas," his statement continued, "it will be 11 years before farmers' cash income from wheat gets back to the 1929 level; and 43 years before cotton growers will get as much as they did in 1929."

He declared that if the New Deal continues to spend in excess of receipts "at its 1933-1939 rate, the gross public debt in another 10 years will be between $70,000,000,000 and $75,000,000,000.

Regimes Compared

Hope compared farm income for the past seven years with the previous seven years under Republican rule, declaring that "the seven Republican years include three years of world depression and the seven New Deal years include five years of recovery and two of depression." He added:

"Cash farm income for the seven Republican years averaged $9,046,000,000 a year compared with $7,247,000,000 a year for the New Deal

Finns Fall Back To New Defenses; Claim Victory On Eastern Front

Moscow (Monday), March 4. The Red army continued to tighten its vise-like grip about the shell and bomb-shredded city of Viipuri in yesterday's fighting, commanding officers reported today, with the capture of Saarela north of the city and the island of Tuppuransaari to to the south.

(The report did not give the distance between Saarela and Viipuri nor did it mention fighting in the city. Russia yesterday reported the capture of the Viipuri railway station and the southern part of the city but Finnish officials last night said the Finns still held Viipuri.

The Soviet forces also reported the capture of four 76-millimeter guns and the fully equipped headquarters of a large military formation. The place of the headquarters was not disclosed.

Tuppuransaari is a small island in the center of Viipuri Bay, where the Red army has been advaneing across the ice. It is about 15 miles south of the port.

The capture of six defensive fortifications, including five iron and concrete artillery forts with heavy coastal guns, also was reported. Other sectors, the Russians said, were quiet.

Finns Fall Back

By the Associated Press

Helsinki, March 4.—Finnish troops continued their withdrawal toward new defense lines at some points on the western side of the Karelian Isthmus today but reported they still were holding off Russian forces pounding at the gates of strategic Viipuri with unrelenting fury from three sides.

With the Viipuri defenders generally repulsing the savage Red army thrusts, the Finnish high command reported that in yesterday's fighting the Russians also were beaten back with heavy losses on the eastern end of the isthmus and north of Lake Ladoga where 1,000 of the enemy were said to have been killed.

Nine Tanks Destroyed

Devastating punishment was inflicted on the Russians on the eastern part of the Karelian Isthmus, the high command said, when the enemy was concentrating for an attack in this area where the Finns still hold their original Mannerheim fortifications. The Finns reported nine Russian tanks and several guns destroyed in this action.

Above Lake Ladoga, the high command announced that Russian attackers ran into a withering fire

Nazi Envoy Repairs Snub, Sees Welles Off to Paris

American Visits Goering 3 Hours, Pays Call to Hess

By Louis P. Lochner,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Berlin, March 3.—Sumner Welles left for Paris tonight after a farewell from Dr. Hans Dieckhoff, recalled German Ambassador to the United States, which aroused speculation as to whether they might have ironed out the question of representation between the two countries.

Dieckhoff, who has remained here since November, 1938, when the American Ambassador was called home from Berlin to report on the anti-Jewish campaign, appeared with other officials at the blacked-out Anhalter station to bid Welles farewell—after being conspicuous by his absence at Welles' arrival Friday.

Protocol calls for a diplomat accredited to another country, but temporarily at home, to greet arriving diplomats from that country.

Quarters close to the German foreign office have said that Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop particularly regretted the absence of an American Ambassador from Berlin at this time.

In Welles' talks with Fuehrer Hitler, Ribbentrop, Deputy Party Leader Hess and Marshall Goering, the question of a possible improvement of relations between Germany and the United States was said to

Nazis 'Regret' Attacking Belgian Plane

Mistaken for English Craft, Says Berlin; Brussels Fires on Fliers

Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, March 3.—The Reich government today expressed regrets to the Belgian ambassador in Berlin, Viscount Davignon, for the shooting down of Belgian planes by a German bomber over Belgian territory yesterday.

The mistake resulted, they said, from the fact that the Belgian air force uses planes of the British Hawker-Hurricane type which the German fliers took for an enemy aircraft.

The dogfight took place over Belgian territory just across the French border. One German plane, according to a report received here, was attacked by seven Hurricane fighters and succeeded in beating them off and in reaching the home base safely.

It was later learned that the supposed enemy planes were actually Belgian machines on a neutrality patrol. The Germans, in the heat of the conflict, apparently never noticed the Belgian markings.

(The French, who regarded the German violation of Belgian neutrality "very seriously," said such Nazi flights over Belgium coincided with daily reconnoitering flights over the French-Belgian border. The German patrol in this area—an area reportedly manned by British troops—appears to be permanent, informed Paris quarters said.)

Belgians Fire on Planes

Brussels, March 3. (AP).—Unidentified foreign planes, sighted high over a Brussels suburb, drew the fire of Belgian antiaircraft batteries again today as the government awaited Berlin's reply to a protest provoked by a roving German bomber which yesterday shot down two Belgian army planes, killing the pilot of one.

Belgian newspapers commented sharply on the incident, and the

Grand Admiral Raeder Analyzes Navy's View Toward Neutral Craft

By the Associated Press

Berlin, March 3 (Via Radio).—Grand Admiral Erich Reader declared today that "the German navy will be guided by the principle to do its very best to show every possible consideration to American vessels wherever they may be."

The Nazi naval chief spoke by radio to the United States in an apparently extemporaneous interview in English with Max Jordan, National Broadcasting Co. representative.

After he had discussed Germany's naval warfare policy in a remarkably informal manner—explaining and arguing points in the manner of a personal, across-the-table discussion—Jordan remarked that prospects were "discouraging" for neutral shipping, and asked for "a pertinent statement," which occasioned Raeder's declaration.

The admiral's principal point in his discussion was Germany's oft-stated contention "that Britain has

Archduke Otto Flies to America In Throne Quest

Lisbon, March 3 (AP).—Archduke Otto left by Clipper plane for the United States today for a visit believed by some observers to be for the purpose of enlisting aid of American Catholics in his claims to the non-existent throne of Austria.

The youthful Hapsburg pretender has never relinquished his claim to the throne of which his father, Emperor Karl, was the last occupant.

Mines Sink 2 Vessels; Coast Raided By Planes

Two Dutch Boats Machinegunned; Crews Escape Aerial Attacker

By Raymond Daniell.
Copyright by New York Times

London, March 3. — Germany's air attacks on British shipping achieved their biggest success to date Saturday, the admiralty announced tonight, with a bomb and machine-gun attack on a British passenger liner which took 108 lives.

Tonight, the 8,441-ton British India steamer Domala lay in an English port, her amidship section smoke-blackened, her superstructure bomb-shattered, and her decks pocked by machine-gun bullets.

Twenty of the 48 British officers and sailors aboard her, including the captain, were missing and believed lost, and 88 British Indian seamen were killed or missing.

Three Direct Hits

The attack was made by moonlight early Saturday morning by a lone Heinkel bomber, which dropped four bombs, three of which struck the mark, according to the admiralty. The Domala was set afire amidships.

After dropping the bombs, survivors said, the Heinkel swopped over the Domala, machine-gunning the survivors, most of whom tumbled hurriedly into lifeboats.

Of the 253 Indians aboard, 143 were passengers, returning to their homeland from Germany, where they had been interned at the start of the war after being taken off the German ships aboard which they had been serving. Through the cooperation of the United States Embassy in Berlin, they had been released—presumably because of the expense of their maintenance. They boarded the Domala at Antwerp.

Seas Hamper Rescue

The official admiralty statement, disclosing the largest loss of life aboard a passenger vessel since the Netherlands steamer Simon Bolivar was sunk by a mine, said the work of rescue was made most difficult by choppy seas.

Many of those picked up by British and Dutch ships were badly wounded. Three died of wounds after reaching shore.

The announcement followed closely disclosure of two other British shipping casualties, the steamer Albano, 1,176 tons, which sank in the North Sea yesterday after hitting a mine, and the 710-ton steamer Cato, which went down off the West Coast today, also the victim of a mine. Two persons were killed and 11 missing from the Cato and two were killed aboard the Albano.

At the same time dispatches from Amsterdam reported the arrival of two Netherlands ships which said they had been machine gunned Friday night while en route from England by an unidentified plane, which also bombed and sank an unnamed British vessel.

13 Attacks Reported

(Of German air raids on British shipping, the German high command said today:

("On the British east coast, two outpost boats and 11 armed or convoyed merchantment were attacked; some were sunk and some severely hit.")

The crews of the Dutch ships, Sint Annaland, 2,248 tons, and Schieland, 2,249 tons, took cover and none was injured.

After the brief attack on the Dutch ships, which were sailing parallel courses, the plane machine-gunned and bombed the British vessel, the Dutch sailors reported.

Several other attacks on shipping near the British coast became known

Blaze at Bowie Race Track Destroys Valuable Horses

Fire Companies From Five Towns Battle Midnight Flames in Stables; Efforts to Rescue Animals Futile

Several valuable horses were destroyed by fire which last night wrecked the stables at Bowie, Md., race track despite efforts of fire companies from five towns.

Discovered shortly after 11 p. m., the flames already had gained much headway. Efforts to remove terrified animals from their stalls were only partly successful. An immediate estimate of damage was not possible.

Fire companies were summoned from Capitol Heights, Bladensburg, Glendale, Laurel and Bowie. Two hours after the blaze was discovered it was still out of control.

Almost six years ago, on July 25, 1934, six buildings at Bowie were destroyed by fire after 14 volunteer companies battled until water was exhausted. At that time loss was set at $25,000, although no horses were in the 98 stalls destroyed.

Most of the Maryland Stables horses not at Southern tracks were stabled at Bowie as well as a number of animals from Washington which are in training at the track.

Tornado Damage Set at $500,000; Red Cross Assists

Alton, Ill., March 3 (AP).—The damage caused by tornadoes in Southern Illinois and a portion of Indiana was placed at more than $500,000 today as the Red Cross, State agencies and workmen sought to help those made homeless.

Property loss here and in Evansville, Ind., was nearly equal, about $250,000 in each city. In addition, residents in the Southern Illinois flatwoods area estimated damage at about $75,000. The storm also caused an estimated $8,000 to $10,000 damage to the Shawneetown, (Ill.) High School.

3 Killed, 14 Hurt in Traffic In District and Nearby Area

Two Washington men were killed and four others injured in an automobile accident near Sperryville, Va., yesterday, while traffic accidents in the Washington area brought death to a 21-year-old Miami, Fla., youth and injury to ten other persons.

Frank Harris, of Miami, an employe aboard the Robert E. Lee, Potomac River excursion steamer, died in Casualty Hospital after suffering a fracture spine in a collision near La Plata, Md. William Henderson, 21, of Indianhead, Md., suffered head, ankle and hip injuries in the same accident and was treated at Casualty Hospital.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

THE CAPITAL DEBUNKED

("A little debunking is wholesome."
—Fra Miller.)

In a rare moment of levity, no doubt, Thomas Jefferson once suggested that newspapers should divide their contents into four categories, headed plainly (1) True; (2) Probable; (3) Possible, and (4) Lies.

Harlan Miller

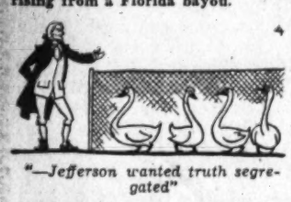
I resent that. . . . But I'm willing to give Mr. Jefferson's theory a whirl, though I suspect he must have thought journalists superhuman, to be able to distinguish automatically the degree of likelihood and veracity in the things politicians tell them.

* * * *

TRUTH: The dome on the U. S. Capitol is approximately in the middle . . . Our next President will be either a Democrat or a Republican . . . By July 17 we will know whether FDR does or doesn't want a third term . . . We never knew whether Cal Coolidge did.

* * * *

None of the 20 top officials in Washington is trying to get us into this war. . . . The Capitol is nearer the ocean but farther from Europe than the White House. . . . A Senator's dignity as he walks across the Senate reminds me of a pelican rising from a Florida bayou.



"—Jefferson wanted truth segregated"

PROBABLE: Half the people have forgotten that the war began with Germany's invasion of Poland. . . . Hoover thinks he could defeat Roosevelt. . . . So far the war is just armed economics, a test whether Germany's or England's trade lanes are more vulnerable.

* * * *

The next President will not be a bachelor . . . Roosevelt does not want a third term . . . Next to FDR Hull is the likeliest Democratic nominee, but declines to make an overt gesture toward the White House . . . Sumner Welles will talk to Hitler more plainly than anyone else has in five years.

* * * *

POSSIBLE: As foreshadowed in this column two months ago, and later repeated elsewhere with too much emphasis, there's a slim chance that FDR might be Secretary of State in a Hull cabinet . . . If FDR is the nominee there may be heat on Garner to accept the Vice Presidency again for the sake of harmony and a united front.

* * * *

We may be stuck with 18 billions in gold if we don't take steps. . . . Roosevelt may denounce the crust of those who accused him of wanting a third term. . . . He may nail down the two-term tradition forever. . . . A third term fight might create the greatest national schism since the Civil War.

"—from black lies in the news"

LIES: That the war will last 30 years. . . . That the typewriters at G. O. P. headquarters, grinding out 100 speeches a week, are water-cooled. . . . That Lord Lothian, the British Ambassador, has a cot at the State Department. . . . That anyone in Washington is much overheated about British censorship of American mail to Europe.

* * * *

That smart Republicans think it's criminal for Roosevelt not to blurt out his third term intentions. . . . That they wouldn't behave like Roosevelt in a similar contingency. . . . That any one can wreck or save the Republic unaided. . . .

* * * *

There you are, Mr. Jefferson. You seemed to forget that when an important politician tells an important lie, that's news, and a newspaper can print it as truth—not guaranteeing the utterance is true, but that the politician said it. So much of the warp and woof of political action consists of opinion, half-truths, trial balloons, speculation, theory, white lies, evasions, claims and window-dressing that I do not think the sorriest citizen is fooled much.

A. F. L. Calls Anti-Trust Suits Brutal

'Damndest Fight Ever' Promised by Padway In Attack on Arnold

By the Associated Press

Atlanta, March 3.—The American Federation of Labor today promised Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold "the damnedest fight he ever had" over anti-trust prosecution of building trades unions.

Denouncing Arnold as "a publicity-seeking individual," Chief Counsel Joseph Padway of the A. F. of L. assailed Federal indictments of union building trades groups in New Orleans and elsewhere as "ruthless, brutal, inconsistent, damaging and destructive of the principles of organized labor." He contended labor unions specifically were exempt from provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

"Any sixth-grade pupil who can read English at all would understand these things," thundered the rotund attorney as delegates from ten Southern States yelled encouragement.

Arnold Invites Conference

Padway's statements came near the close of a two-day Southern organization conference of the A. F. of L. and followed by a few hours a charge by John P. Coyne, president of the building and construction trades of the A. F. of L., that Arnold was seeking "to place organized labor under the thumb of the Federal Government." Arnold earlier, in Washington, had made public a letter to Coyne, inviting labor leaders to a conference to clear up "any misunderstanding that exists" over the Government's position.

President William Green shouted defiance to "foes of organized labor" and declared the federation would endure as long as the Nation itself.

Green directed his fire at "a great columnist who has been denouncing not only individuals connected with the American Federation of Labor but our great movement itself." After leaving the rostrum, Green identified the columnist as Westbrook Pegler.

The columnist, Green said, charged "that two or three men in two or three different cities of two or three different localities, connected with the A. F. of L. or organizations affiliated with it, are dishonest, are criminals, are guilty of crimes committed. And I think it has been stated that if called upon he could name 100 more.

Cites Small Percentage

"Well, my friends," Green continued, "that is a very small percentage of four and one-quarter million A. F. of L. members. I wonder if he couldn't find 100 or more dishonest people who are associated with a religious organization of our Nation.

"Now I want to state in answer to those charges that the American Federation of Labor denounces wrong-doing, racketeering criminals and exploiting criminals, any place and wherever committed, by any man or woman connected with our movement. We call upon the officers of the law to apply the statutes—the criminal statutes of the country—to any who are guilty of wrong-doing, either in our movement or outside of our movement. Can we do anything more? . . ."

Padway and Representative Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, today criticized administration of the Wagner Act by the National Labor Relations Board and advocated elimination of the present three-man board in favor of a five-member board, regionally selected.

Ramspeck told the labor delegates to look first to strong union organization and then to labor legislation.

"If you've got a strong union," he observed, "you don't need much legislation.

You Too, Says Pegler

Miami Beach, Fla., March 3 (AP).—Westbrook Pegler, columnist who was called a foe of organized labor by A. F. L. President William Green today, asserted Green and other executive council members were labor's real foes "because they do nothing about racketeers within their ranks."

"It is not enough to deplore," said the writer. "It is up to the A. F. L. to get them out. But his action and the A. F. L.'s action regarding the building trades indictments gives the answers to the whole thing—in one breath they ask the authorities to go to work on the racketeers, and in the next they promise the authorities who have gone to work 'the damndest fight you ever saw.'

"Green carefully misquotes me as saying I could name 100 other criminals associated with the labor movement. What I said was that I could name 100 more criminals who are labor leaders. I doubt that Mr. Green could name 100 religious leaders who are criminals."

Roosevelt Marks Inaugural Anniversary at Church Today

President Roosevelt last night quietly completed his seventh year in the White House and prepared to attend this morning special anniversary church services that will usher in the short year completing his second term.

Deprived by the "lame duck" constitutional amendment of a full eight years in the two elective periods, Mr. Roosevelt will have completed his second term some six weeks before another anniversary of his 1933 inauguration is reached. Growing belief that he will not attempt a third campaign tended to remove political significance for future March 4 dates.

Present with the Chief Executive yesterday was his mother, Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt, who had come to Washington for the anniversary services today.

With Mrs. Roosevelt and his mother, members of his Cabinet and other administration officials, the President will drive to St. John's Episcopal Church across Lafayette square from the White House, where he worshiped on March 4, 1933, before going to the Capitol to take the Presidential oath of office the first time, and where other anniversary services have been held.

Dr. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton School, which Mr. Roosevelt attended as a boy, will read the prayer for divine guidance. Assisting him will be the Rev. Oliver H. Hart, rector of St. John's; the Rev. Frank R. Wilson, Episcopal minister of Hyde Park, N. Y., and the Rev. Howard S. Wilkinson, of St. Thomas' Episcopal Church here, which Mr. Roosevelt customarily attends.

Dr. Peabody officiated at the service seven years ago and at the services marking the President's second inauguration.

Only 720 File For 1,000 Posts In Pa. Primary

Harrisburg, Pa., March 3 (AP).—The majority of aspirants for top offices at stake in Pennsylvania's 1940 primary still were missing tonight as the zero hour for entering the election approached.

Only an estimated 720 office seekers filed the necessary nominating petitions up to Saturday night. There are approximately 1,000 places to be filled by voters on April 23, counting nominations of both parties.

The deadline for filing is 5 p. m. tomorrow.

United States Senator Joseph F. Guffey, bucking opposition for re-election, is the only Democrat who has filed so far for that nomination. Walter A. Jones, chairman of the Turnpike Commission, who is favored by Guffey's party opponents, is expected to announce tomorrow whether he will run.

On the Republican side, Jay Cooke, Philadelphia chairman and his party organization's choice for Guffey's seat, also must file tomorrow.

Beat Roosevelt Now or Never, Gannett Says

Los Angeles, March 3 (AP).—Frank E. Gannett, publisher and candidate for the Republican nomination for President, today said on his arrival from San Diego:

"If we don't defeat Roosevelt this year—we'll never do it. Four years more of Roosevelt will take us farther along the path toward one-man government."

Of the European war, the publisher said:

"There may be a flare-up in the spring. I expect delicate situations to develop. Personally, I am fearful Roosevelt is so war-minded and so prejudiced that if a critical situation arises which would enlist popular support we might 'get into it.'

"But we must keep out, else all our liberties will perish."

Edison Reveals Plans to Protect Atlantic Coast

Norfolk, Va., March 3 (AP).—Secretary of the Navy Edison, speaking today in a downpour at dedication of Norfolk's $400,000 municipal airport, said the Atlantic Seaboard would not be "slighted" in the naval expansion program.

"We believe that there should be a reasonable sea force in the Atlantic. We are pushing the work on all our bases," he said. "I have recommended that both coasts receive definite protection."

Mrs. Edison, carrying a corsage of roses, stepped up a ladder to the nose of a new 21-passenger airliner and, by dotting an "i" and crossing a "t" with a paint brush christened it "The City of Norfolk."

War Reduces Farm Exports, U. S. Reports

Shortage in Supply Of Vegetables Is Seen In Wake of Freezes

The Agriculture Department said yesterday that the European war had diminished the export demand for farm products, but had increased domestic demand through stimulating industrial production.

"United States exports of tobacco and fruits have been greatly reduced," it said. "Exports of pork and lard are not up to the volume flow normally in a year of large production and low prices. Export sales of cotton have been good, but have declined recently. Little wheat is going abroad."

In discussing the increased domestic demand flowing from greater industrial production, the department said the outlook was "less propitious now that industrial production has declined."

Wheat Is Increase Cited

The department pointed out that wheat had again topped $1 a bushel in domestic markets, reflecting increased demand for wheat and flour, renewed concern over poor United States winter wheat prospects and the likelihood of cold weather damage to wheat in Europe.

It said domestic cotton consumption may decline in the next few months, but that the total for the current season was expected to be close to the high record in 7,950,000 bales established in the 1936-1937 season.

The relatively high price of feed in relation to quotations for meat animals is creating an unfavorable situation for cattle and hog farmers, the department said.

Supplies of most vegetables are expected to be smaller this spring, the department said, because of damage to Southern crops by freezing weather in January.

Compensation Gains

The slackening in production and employment caused a 34 per cent increase in unemployment compensation benefit payments during January, the Social Security Board said in another report.

Payments totaled nearly $41,000,000 in January. A weekly average of 877,000 workers received benefits.

All but two States—Oregon and Maine—reported increases.

The board noted that the benefit payments reported by State employment-security agencies showed a general increase of only 3.7 per cent in January, 1940, over the same month a year ago.

While Ohio Democrats considered possible candidates to replace Donahey, something of a champion as a vote-getter, Representative Vorys (Republican), of Ohio, commented:

"By eliminating himself after surveying the Ohio political situation, shrewd and able Senator Donahey has given a more accurate reflection of the outlook than could be obtained by any number of straw votes. It is highly significant that he chooses to retire when all signs point Republican."

John McSweeney, former representative-at-large, announced his candidacy to succeed Donahey. Others being mentioned included Martin L. Davey, former governor; George White, also a former governor; former Representative Charles West, who has served President Roosevelt in numerous capacities; Charles Sawyer, national committeeman; former Democratic State Chairman Francis W. Poulson, and Francis W. Durbin, Allen County leader. Arthur Limbach, State chairman, was said to have indicated he favored Harry Caton, secretary of the National Grange.

Bridges Attacks Trade Pacts

In another Republican attack on Administration policies, Senator Bridges, of New Hampshire, candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, last night declared that the reciprocal trade agreements program has subjected American farmers and workmen to ruinous foreign competition.

"Six years of secret trade-agreement bargaining by State Department bureaucrats," Bridges said, "have resulted in destroying one-third the protecttion that formerly safeguarded the American market for Americans. . . .

"Bureaucracy, bargaining secretly with foreign negotiators, has made a mess of our farm export trade and is sacrificing the American market. Extension of the trade agreement program will subject the United States to ruinous competition when the millions of men now at war become producers again."

3 Nations Offer U. S. Air Bases For Defense

Colombia, Panama And Costa Rica Named; Pledge Given Roosevelt

Copyright by New York Times

A few hours after President Roosevelt's return from Panama, official circles were informed that the President personally obtained direct assurances from three countries near the Panama Canal that they would allow American military planes to use their air fields in case this should ever be necessary for wartime defense of the waterway.

Colombia and Panama were two of these countries, and Costa Rica was mentioned as the other.

Mr. Roosevelt conferred with President Augusto S. Boyd of Panama and other Panamian officials on his 18-day trip through the Panama Canal and up the Pacific Coast of Central America. Official circles were informed after his return that he had seen ranking representatives of two other nations.

That Colombia should give such assurances was regarded as particularly interesting in view of the earlier difficulties about the presence in Colombia of German pilots working for the Scadta commercial air lines founded by German World War fliers. The Nazis among these fliers were understood to have been eliminated now.

Understanding Is Cited

The President in a press conference Saturday on his train before arrival in Washington said that, as an outcome of the Lima and Panama declarations, complete understanding existed between all American republics on joint defense of the canal. Mr. Roosevelt denied that the use of land adjacent to that now under United States jurisdiction would be necessary in strengthening the canal's defenses.

President Boyd, of Panama, is understood to have assured Mr. Roosevelt that Panama regards its interests as identical with those of the United States as far as defense of the canal is concerned. In the light of developments on his cruise, President Roosevelt is represented in official quarters as feeling that the Lima and Panama Pan-American conferences have strengthened real cooperation among the nations of this hemisphere.

When the President sailed from Pensacola February 15 for an unidentified objective later disclosed as the Panama Canal, he persisted in answering "no comment" to questions as to whether he would meet foreign representatives while away from the United States. This raised considerable conjecture at the time, although reporters had European representatives in mind when they questioned him.

Finally Discloses Aims

When Mr. Roosevelt reached the Canal Zone February 18, he gave no press interview and mystery as to his plans deepened. On February 19, however, Mr. Roosevelt held a press conference aboard the cruiser Tuscaloosa for representatives of press agencies trailing him on the Lang. He revealed then he was conducting a study of the Canal Zone and Central American defense. Where he saw the Colombian officials and those of another country, probably Costa Rica, is not known. It probably was in Panama.

Since returning to Washington, the President has had a brief report from Sumner Welles, Undersecretary of State, indicating that the information he collected in Rome from Premier Mussolini was not encouraging as regards peace.

Ickes Praises New Deal For Saving U. S. Resources

Interior Department Was Founded For Exploitation, Has Been Shifted To Conservation, Secretary Asserts

Secretary Ickes, hailing 7 years of the New Deal, said yesterday that more had been done in this period to make the Interior Department "a department of conservation" than was accomplished in the 91 prior years of its existence.

In observance of the Administration's anniversary today, the Interior Department released a 2,500-word summary of achievements which attributed the swing toward conservation to "the Congress by legislation, President Roosevelt by executive action, and the Department of the Interior by deliberate, aggressive administration and policy."

It included the observation by Ickes that the Interior Department when created in 1849 "was purposely conceived as a department of exploitation."

"That was considered the need of the country then as resources appeared endless," Ickes continued. . . . "Under President Roosevelt, resources have been protected and conserved so that they will last a long while, although our task is not complete as yet."

The following were listed as "major points of achievement" by the department:

Establishment of "prudent grazing practices" on 134,000,000 acres of public domain.

Increased opportunities for agriculture through irrigation.

Advance in mine safety and development of helium.

A "higher degree" of self-government and the fostering of native culture for Indians.

Advancement of a "broad program for social and economic betterment in the Nation's far-flung territories."

Greater industrial opportunities in the Pacific Northwest through development of hydroelectric power at the Bonneville and Grand Coulee projects on the Columbia River.

Party Leaders Debate Record Of New Deal

Republicans Attack, Democrats Defend In Forum Over WOL

Three leading New Dealers and three of its most outspoken Republican critics agreed last night something ought to be done about the unemployment situation and farm prices—but, what?

"Elect a Republican administration," argued Senate Minority Leader McNary, of Oregon; Senator Tobey, of New Hampshire, and Representative Dirksen, of Illinois. "Elect a Republican administration and unshackle the present bureaucratic fetters from industry and business."

"Reelect the New Deal," chorused Majority Leader Barkley, of Kentucky; Senator Mead, of New York, and Representative Jones, of Texas. "Reelect the New Deal and it will complete its work in solving the unemployment and farm problems."

The speakers offered their strong divergent views on the Administration's achievements and failings on the eve of the New Deal's seventh birthday during the "American Forum of the Air" broadcast over WOL. A large audience of Senators, Congressmen and newspapermen attended the broadcast in the National Press Club auditorium. Theodore Granik, radio commentator, was chairman, and Richard L. Wilson, Press Club president, led the panel discussion.

Barkley Is Outspoken

Senator Barkley, a "dark horse" Democratic Presidential candidate, frankly admitted that he didn't know any cure for the Nation's unemployment situation. But, he insisted, neither did anyone else. He maintained that the Nation's 18,000,000 unemployed had been reduced to 9,000,000 under the New Deal.

"The New Deal has gone a long way toward finding a solution to idle labor in the past seven years," declared the majority leader. "Five years more and there'll be a labor shortage in the country."

Representative Dirksen scoffed at Democratic statistics and conclusions. "In the first place, there were only 12,000,000 unemployed," he insisted. "And we've just about as many jobless people today."

Nation "Hanging on Wall"

The New Deal has lifted the drowning Nation three-quarters of the way up from the well and left it hanging there, Dirksen averred. The Government, he added, must encourage the development and expenditure of "venture capital" if it ever expects to find jobs for everybody.

Republican Senate Leader McNary charged the New Deal had lowered the standard of living, blocked industrial expansion, reduced farm income, dried up investment capital, cut the average income and doubled the national debt.

McNary denounced "the false New Deal economic philosophy that abundance can be produced by creating artificial scarcity . . . that our profits system is outmoded and outworn and can only function if the Government itself undertakes to keep it operating."

The Republican Party, he said, stands for "free enterprise" under regulation adequate to safeguard the common against special interests; for "adequate relief," with States and localities handling the funds; for creation of "plenty" by "real work in private industry at a living and not a subsistence wage."

Income Increase Claimed

Senator Barkley claimed that President Roosevelt took office when the Nation was in a financial crisis and that today the Nation has the safest banking system in the world. He praised the work of New Deal agencies in physically and spiritually improving community life, and avowed that farm income had increased 82 per cent in the seven New Deal years, wages 62 per cent, dividends 55 per cent.

"The New Deal," asserted Barkley, "shortened the hours of labor, increased its unit of compensation, gave it a forum for the exercise of the right of collective bargaining, regulated and reduced the abuses of child labor and have seen that no person went without food, clothing or shelter.

Senator Mead observed that "no party and no candidate" has recommended repeal or substantial modification of the New Deal."

Representative Jones said farm income was up.

Senator Tobey attacked President Roosevelt's "lack of frankness" on his foreign policy.

That left the census. Tobey was particularly indignant about questions relative to income, and the Democratic contingent rejoined that the questions asked under the census were a result of a Republican law passed in 1929.

Helena Rubinstein Exhibits Art Treasures At Mayflower to Get Funds for Native Poland

Princess Gourielli, better known as Helena Rubinstein, the beauty expert, and her husband, Prince Gourielli-Tchkonia, view a Picasso. It is one of a number of paintings in her collection on exhibit at the Mayflower for the benefit of the Polish Refugee Relief Fund

Helena Rubinstein, beauty expert and wife of the claimant to a throne 300 years vacant, walked slowly through the great hall of the Mayflower Hotel yesterday afternoon and surveyed with approval and some anxiety the fruits of 30 years as a patroness of the arts.

There were 135 paintings and drawings, by such pillars of the modern style as Pisasso, Degas, Cezanne and Matisse. There were brilliant and somber colors, violent shapes and calm faces. On tables were grotesque wooden figures carved by the natives of Africa.

Among them were works of Polish artists, a portrait of Madame Rubinstein by Alice Halicka, an abstraction by Louis Marcoussis.

"I knew them all," she said, clasping her hands so that the many headed bracelets rattled. "This is only part of my collection, mostly from Paris and a few from New York. I have more in London, but I could not get them here. The biggest ones I did not bring over; there are not rooms high enough.

"You see I am interested in Poland. I was born there, in Cracow. There are all those millions of people starving over there, we must do something for them." She shook her head unhappily, and a friend at her elbow took up the story.

Helena Rubinstein, or Princess Gourielli, has devoted her entire time and fortune since the beginning of the war to helping Poland, according to her friend, Grace Davidson, of Boston. In this she is helped by her husband, Prince Artchil Gourielli-Tchkonia, who would be reigning today in Georgia had that kingdom not been conquered by Russia in the seventeenth century.

To interest people in Poland and in modern art the famous beauty expert has assembled some of her pictures for public exhibition, hoping those who see them will contribute to the Polish Refugee Relief Fund. They will be on exhibit at the Mayflower today, tomorrow and Wednesday.

A few of the pictures will be sold for the cause. Madame Rubinstein would not say which she will part with.

Cheat Death

Six Sailors Saved After 14 Days on Wreck

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, March 3.—Six sailors, the captain and crew of the wrecked Nova Scotia lumber schooner Chisholm, who had clung to the deck of their waterlogged ship for 14 days, arrived in New York yesterday aboard the Swedish freighter, Sagoland, which rescued them Thursday about 300 miles east of Bermuda.

The six sailors told of the long ordeal, during which they had a scanty supply of water and nothing much to eat save a few raw vegetables. The Chisholm was abandoned and Capt. Henrik Bang-Melchior sent out a general radio warning to vessels in the vicinity. The wrecked vessel was a 148-ton three-masted schooner, owned by the Lunenberg, N. S. Outfitting Co. It was not equipped with radio or an auxiliary engine.

The Chisholm put out of Shelbourne, N. S., on February 7, with a cargo of lumber for Barbados. After bucking heavy seas for a week the 20-year-old schooner opened up her seams and was waterlogged within an hour, according to her master, Capt. George H. Corkum.

For the next fourteen days he and his five met lived on the open deck, most of the time lashed to the boom to keep from being washed overboard. Two ships came into sight during the period, but both passed on without sighting the wallowing hulk. The thirteenth night adrift, Arthur Burns, 19 years old, and the youngest member of the crew, sighted a light.

"We jigged around and found a drum of gasoline, which we lashed to the deck," Capt. Corkum said, in matter-of-fact tones. "Then we got a stick of wood and Gordon Acker offered his overcoat, which we soaked in gasoline. Then we lit the beacon, and next thing we knew we could see the ship bearing down on us and we knew we were safe. We weren't going to let that ship get away, not after those others!"

The Sagoland launched a lifeboat but heavy seas made it impossible for the craft to come alongside the Chisholm. The Swedish vessel stood by, but another attempt could not be made for 36 hours.

Alfred R. Shrigley Dies in Boston

Boston, Mass., March 3.—Alfred Rolfe Shrigley, 57, former Assistant Attorney General and Consul in New England for Mexico and Panama, died late tonight after an illness of 10 days. He was born in Valparaiso, Chile, the son of Dr. Winfield Scott and Emma (Rolfe) Shrigley, and was educated at Boston Latin and English high schools and received his LL.B. degree from Boston University Law School in 1902.

He was a Republican, a president of the Boston Kiwanis Club, former treasurer of the Boston Square and Compass Club, a Knight Templar and a member of the Aleppo Temple and the Boston City Club.

Rescuing Chinese Girl Dooms Pilot to 4 Years' Bill Paying

Soul He Saved From Drowning Is Listed As Officially Dead, but Cost of Her Board and Lodging Still Dogs Him

By the Associated Press

New York, March 3.—That this story may be understood by the Occidental mind, it must be stated that when a Chinese is snatched from the jaws of death it is not uncommon for him to be stricken from the official rolls of the living.

So it was with the Chinese girl whom C. S. Vaughn, transport pilot, lifted dripping from the cold waters of the Yangtze River nearly four years ago. And so it is that Vaughn is still getting bills—and paying—for the board and lodging of a soul for whose rescue he was responsible.

In today's southbound air mail there flew a piece of parchment paper, inscribed in beautiful Chinese script, dunning Vaughn for the board and keep of a soul which is, paradoxically, still among the quick.

Vaughn, who has paid these bills with growing protest, will receive the dun at Miami when he returns from his Pan American Airways' clipper run to Rio de Janeiro.

The story goes back to that day when Vaughn brought his airplane to rest at Wahn-Sien.

A strong wind whipped across the river. He called for help to weight down a pontoon and thereby control a wing, tugging at its mooring. The first volunteer was a girl, eager to speed the progress of aviation. Men followed her, though, and in the melee the girl went overboard.

No one moved. So Vaughn shed his coat and dived.

Nearly seven months passed before Vaughn returned to Wahn-Sien, and awaiting him was a constabulary officer. In his hand was a bill for $3.18 "Mex" ($1.59) "for board and lodging one rescued soul, responsibility Pilot Vaughn."

Vaughn argued with the officer. Officially the girl had quit this life. Vaughn had seen fit to bring her back. Therefore she was his charge until she got married. Vaughn paid and has been paying ever since.

Hatch Act Up In Senate Today

ministration of law," Walter said in a statement:

"This bill will regulate the regulators and govern the bureaucrats who today have mushroomed in the network of Federal Administration until their rules and edicts in many instances have become oppressive and wholly unreasonable. And, too, many citizens have been deprived of their rights without the privilege of any appeal to courts of justice."

Of the opposition by "left-wingers," he said:

"We cannot take too seriously the opposition of these so-called liberals. Stalin and Hitler are liberals if these men are, because in Russia and in Germany the courts have no power to review the decisions of Hitlerites and Stalinites."

President Roosevelt tomorrow will take up with Capitol leaders the problems still before the legislature at the first conference he has has had with them since before he departed on his Panama Canal trip. While there have been predictions the House may be finished with its program by May 15, the Senate probably will require two weeks longer.

Mr. Roosevelt may take up at tomorrow's conference his insistence that 15,000,000 be restored to the War Department appropriation bill for a third set of locks at the Panama Canal. To date, Congressional economy advocates have cut close to $290,000,000, tentatively in some cases, from the President's budget, hoping to avoid the need for $400,000,000 in new taxes proposed by the President.

The dispute over personal financial questions to be asked by census takers will come to a head today when a Senate Commerce subcommittee votes on elimination of the questions, objected to by Senator Tobey (Republican), of New Hampshire, and others. The full committee is scheduled to vote on the question tomorrow.

The Senate Finance Committee will vote about midweek on the House-approved resolution to extend for three years the Administration"s authority to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements.

The Interior Department appropriation bill is to be taken up in the House later in the week.

House Cuts Commended

Boston, March 3 (AP).—Observing that "economy, like charity, must begin at home," the Boston Chamber of Commerce today published a letter congratulating the House Committee on Appropriations for favoring economy in rivers and harbors appropriations, even though it meant curtailment of New England projects.

"We will refrain from making any demands for public works projects for our locality which will prevent a decrease of expenditures," said the letter signed by Chairman Philip Nichols, and addressed to Representative Taylor (Democrat), Colorado, chairman of the committee. Taylor has advocated a $2,000,000 reduction in the rivers and harbors appropriation.

Balancing of the Federal budget was described as "of vital importance to the future well-being of the country as a whole."

Cafe Owner Held After Fight Death

Mechanic Is Victim Of Fatal Scuffle Near Restaurant

James C. McGuire, 38-year-old restaurant owner, was held without bond at the Fifth Precinct station yesterday pending an inquest at noon today into the death of Marvin Goodwin, 39-year-old automobile mechanic.

Goodwin, who lived at 1123 Eleventh street northwest, died Saturday night in Emergency Hospital as the result of a fractured skull said ti have been sustained after a fight near a restaurant at 1302 Eleventh street northwest. Goodwin's head is said to have struck the cement pavement in the scuffle. He was taken home by two sons.

At 4:45 a. m., an Emergency Hospital ambulance surgeon, responding to a call to Goodwin's home, found the mechanic unconscious on the bedroom floor. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald said that an autopsy yesterday revealed that Goodwin's death resulted from injuries suffered in the scuffle.

Lieut. George Darnall, of the homicide squad, said that McGuire asserted he was attacked when he ordered the Goodwins to leave the restaurant at closing time, shortly after midnight Friday.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Hans Kindler conducts the National Symphony Orchestra Sunday afternoon in Constitution Hall, with Sigurd Rascher as saxophone soloist. Program: "Comes Autumn Time", (Sowerby), Two Choric Dances (Creston), Rhapsody for saxophone (Debussy), Concertino for saxophone (Ibert), Symphony No. 2 (Hanson).

With a program containing native compositions by Howard Hanson, Leo Sowerby and Paul Creston, and the soloist, Sigurd Rascher, playing a saxophone manufactured in this country, yesterday's concert by the National Symphony Orchestra came very near being an American festival. It was good to hear so much American music of excellent quality conducted by Hans Kindler in a vein of persuasive eloquence and performed by the players with the verve and brilliance that characterize their work these days. The audience appreciated the occasion as well, dispensing cordial plaudits upon the home-grown compositions and paying personal compliments to Paul Creston, who bowed his thanks from one of the boxes.

Ray C. Brown

News of the virtuosity of Sigurd Rascher had preceded his arrival, and his demonstration of it brought him a merited ovation. His disclosure of the tonal capabilities of an alto saxophone was a revelation to those who may have thought that the instrument could not comport itself creditably in symphonic company. He fingered a surprisingly wide gamut and a variety in coloration no less striking. Some of his tones resembled woodwind timbres, and the high soprano tones were scarcely distinguishable from violin quality. His technical mastery in dynamics ranged from a reedy fortissimo to a fluting pianissimo that made a repeated phrase sound like a softened echo.

His appearance enabled most of us to hear for the first time Debussy's "Rhapsody" which proved to be a more attractive piece than the circumstances of its composition would have led one to expect. Having accepted a commission from Mrs. Eliza Hall, of Boston, to write for her a work for saxophone and orchestra, Debussy regretted his bargain, partly because he knew little about the instrument which he called "aquatic," and partly because he didn't believe that it was a suitable instrument for women to play.

He dilly-dallied over the writing for years, and nearly a decade elapsed before he sent Mrs. Hall a sketch of the rhapsody in an incomplete condition with only indications for the instrumentation. Debussy never heard the work performed, for it was after his death that Jean Roger-Ducasse orchestrated it. Despite this obvious unwillingness of the composer, the rhapsody is as unmistakeably Debussyan as anything he produced, and consequently charged with his idiomatic charm. The rhythmic pattern and certain of the melodic themes impart an atmosphere somewhat Moorish.

Jacques Ibert's "Concertino da Camera," on the other hand, was composed expressly for Mr. Rascher with a deftness which exploits every possibility of the saxophone. Of its two movements, the first is a witty and gay allegro in which the solo instrument engages as one voice in an animated conversation. The second movement, opening with a long solo passage like an improvisation in rhapsodic style, quickens its pace to a rapid swirl in carnival spirit. The music is brilliantly scored with a continual shimmer of iridescence. Having recalled with enthusiastic approval, Mr. Rascher rewarded the audience with an extra number, an unaccompanied Swedish folksong.

Dr. Kindler opened the concert with Leo Sowerby's colorful overture, "Comes Autumn Time," which admirably conveys both the moods associated with the season of the year. It begins as robustly as a gale and as flamboyantly as the hues of autumn foliage, subsides into a quiet meditation on the evanescence of life, and then resumes its boisterous happiness.

Paul Creston's two "Choric Dances," performed for the first time here, showed a marked talent for orchestral writing. The scoring is neat and effective, with a sure sense of color values. Despite the composer's disavowal of a "program" for the dances, the emotional evocations would go well with a Greek drama. The slow dance is particularly appropriate to a classical setting and to the dignity of an entr' acte in a tragedy. In the second dance, Mr. Creston has used variant rhythms with subtlety and skill.

A rehearing of Howard Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony No. 2 impressed one anew with its sturdy and perdurable qualities. This is sincerely felt and powerfully projected music, rich in poesy and rugged with vitality. It is Nordic in its characteristics and in its thematic material, consciously or unconsciously emanating from the Swedish strain in the composer, and it is thoroughly American in its vigor and assertiveness.

Grace Church Pays Tribute To Dr. Lenski

Twenty-five years ago two young men stood in the Seminary of Capital University, Columbus, Ohio, to receive their bachelor of theology degrees.

Yesterday, one of them, the Rev. Dr. Ralph Long, executive secretary of the National Lutheran Council, led a tribute to the other, the Rev. Dr. Gerhard E. Lenski, upon completion of the Rev. Dr. Lenski's 20 years as Grace Lutheran pastor, and on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ordination to the ministry.

Preaching from the pulpit of the church at Sixteenth and Varnum streets northwest, built during Dr. Lenski's ministry at a cost of $250,000, Dr. Long warned the congregation that the world's need today is a "vitalized ministry, a new emphasis on God, sacrifice, good will and the Christian way of life."

Joining in praising Dr. Lenski, who received many floral tributes, were Dr. L. M. Zimmerman, pastor emeritus of Christ Lutheran Church, Baltimore, Md.; G. F. A. Stutz, president of Grace congregation 20 years ago; Hugh V. Keiser, present president, and others.

Dr. Lenski, who holds degrees from George Washington University and American University Graduate School, also has been in the literary field, having had several calls to editorial and literary work.

Iceland Ship Aids Leaking Greek Steamer

Rockland, Me., March 3 (AP).—The 3,456-ton Greek freighter Makis, leaking in tempestuous weather 1,000 miles east of New York, has advised ships proceeding to her assistance to resume their courses, Mackay Radio reported today.

The ship's master said the Iceland steamer Godagoss was standing by to lend assistance if it should be required during the night.

Although the Makis had a broken rudder, chain and hatch, and water in her engine room, the captain was unwilling to abandon ship. The 340-foot steamer sent out an SOS call yesterday afternoon.

At least seven ships started to her aid.

Russia Terms Finn Victory Claims Absurd

'Approaching the End Of Adventure,' Asserts Red Army Statement

By the Associated Press

Moscow (Monday) March 4.—The Red army today called "absurd" Finnish claims of recent victories—an apparent reference to the reported destruction of the Eighteenth Russian Division and the Thirty-fourth Moscow Tank Brigade.

A statement from Leningrad military headquarters said Finland was "approaching the end of the adventure" of her "White Finnish" rulers, who were described as so desperate that Finnish soldiers reluctant to fight for a "hopeless cause" were put against the wall and shot when it became necessary to surrender their fortifications.

The statement, supplementing the regular military communique and distributed by the official Soviet news agency, Tass, was in reply to a recent Finnish note to the League of Nations and said Finnish charges of the bombing of civilian populations were "witless" and "fantastic" fabrications.

Answers Note to League

The statement said Finland's allegation that 392 civilians were killed by hundreds of planes dropping thousands of bombs in the first two months of the war "flatly refutes the fantastic fabrications regarding Soviet troops and Soviet aviation."

Smallness of the casualties, the statement said, showed Russian bombing raids were carried out against military objectives alone.

The statement answered the Finnish government's note to the League of Nations last Thursday.

"This 'note' consists entirely of transparently false and fantastic allegations," the statement said.

"The 'note' alleges that 'Soviet air raids against the Finnish civilian population are effected almost daily, that hundreds of airplanes, sometimes over 500, participated in these raids, that Soviet airplanes dropped about 20,000 bombs, that frequently machine-gun fire opened from the airplanes.

"The 'note' does not hesitate to tell such incongruous lies but states that all this is directed chiefly against the civil population.

"End of Adventure"

"However, the 'note' itself reveals the full extent of the clumsiness of the Finnish story-tellers. Thus, even according to the manifestly exaggerated Finnish figures to which the 'note' refers, '392 civilians were killed during the air bombings.' . . .

"This fact alone flatly refutes the fantastic fabrications regarding Soviet troops and Soviet aviation contained in the 'note' of the bankrupt Finnish rulers. This fact alone fully confirms that in reality the Soviet aviation in its numerous successful actions fired on Finnish troops, fortifications, airdromes and other military objectives in Finland's territory but by no means on the civil population."

The statement said the "slanderous fabrications directed against the Red Army cannot postpone the approaching end of the adventure of the Finnish rulers against the Soviet Union just as it cannot be done by such actions of Finnish officers as when being compelled to surrender military fortifications on the Karelian Isthmus to Soviet troops they bind to the wall and shoot on the spot Finnish soldiers who do not wish to fight for a hopeless cause."

Paper Attacks Allies

The Leningrad headquarters also said the Finnish note, "attempting to embellish the hopeless situation of the Finnish White Guards (Finnish army), also declares that 'Soviet troops succeeded in occupying only territories of little importance.' The headquarters . . . does not find it necessary to refute such witless statements. These assertions are on a level with recent reports of victories of the Finnish White Guards, the absurdity of which is obvious."

In a lengthy review of the first six months of European warfare, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda charged the Allies still were seeking to involve Russia.

"There is no doubt the Anglo-French imperialists are eager to repeat 'the Finnish experiment' in the Near East," Pravda declared without elaborating.

Nazis Express Regret to Belgium

Antwerp Metropole expressed hope that "this most serious and regrettable violation of our neutrality is not the beginning of a new German policy."

The general public, while indignant, showed no signs of unusual alarm, and most persons seemed to believe the incident would be closed quickly.

The Brussels newspaper, Nation Belge, said the action of the Nazi bomber, reported to have opened fire when surrounded by three Belgian planes over Belgium's Luxemburg province, was "deliberate aggression and no other words can explain the odious act."

Asserting that the incident had "awakened cruel memories" and provoke Belgians to "ardent and justified indignation," the newspaper added:

"This intolerable aggression amply justified the government's strong protest that such an act of force cannot be repeated."

The protest was delivered late yesterday by Foreign Minister Spaak to German Ambassador von Buelow-Schwante. There was no further comment from the government today.

The press gave equal attention to a series of unrelated accidents in which four other Belgian military planes cracked up yesterday. One pilot was killed and another died later in a hospital.

February Revenue Gains in Virginia

Richmond, Va., March 3 (AP).—N. B. Early, collector of internal revenue, has reported here that February collections exceeded last year's by $3,053,208 with $16,976,000 being taken in last month, as compared with $13,922,792 in February of 1939.

February income tax collections, he said, "far exceeded those of any given year to date in the amount and number of taxpayers." The office took in $561,046 on incomes, as compared with $431,749 for the same month in 1939.

'Every Consideration' Pledged U. S. Shipping by German Navy

Admiral Raeder as He Broadcast Yesterday

made all her shipping liable to attack by arming merchant ships and using peaceful craft for military purposes.

"I find it rather difficult to understand the position you are taking, admiral," Jordan said. "You probably know that the sinking of English fishing boats by German naval forces has met with strong disapproval in the United States and elsewhere. It is not easy to see how civilians, such as the British fishermen, have anything to do with military operations."

"You are mistaken, Mr. Jordan," the admiral replied. "It is an accepted view that merchant ships lose their civilian character when they take part in belligerent activities . . ."

"Can fishing boats really be used as auxiliary naval ships and are they actually employed as such?" Jordan asked.

"Yes," said the admiral. "Let me explain. Fishing boats are very well suited by their seaworthiness to serve as patrol boats or mine sweepers. . . .

"All the ships we use in this way we incorporate in the navy, which makes them official auxiliary units. They fly the naval ensign. . . .

'England Behaves Differently'

"England behaves differently. She uses merchant craft and merchant seamen without giving them the status of naval war craft . . . I don't think we can be blamed for regarding it as typical hypocrisy if England raises complaints against Germany on the ground that the latter has set to the attack of harmless merchant vessels."

"In no price war, admiral, have neutrals been in so difficult a position and never have their privileges been exposed to as serious a menace . . . One of their most vital privileges is peaceful commercial shipping. Does Germany intend to question it?"

"No, we don't," Raeder replied. "Neutral ships expose themselves to the danger of being sunk only when they behave as belligerents—for instance, sailing at night without lights, or by offering resistance to an order to stop, or by conveying information to the enemy. . . .

'Every Consideration' to U. S.

"All that you said, admiral, appears to be rather discouraging to the neutrals . . . The prospect of a growing intensity of naval warfare makes one think of the possibility of dangers arising for American shipping even outside of what one might call the immediate zones of war. I feel certain, admiral, that a pertinent statement by you would meet with great interest in the United States."

"The German Navy," Raeder said, "will . . . show every possible consideration to American vessels wherever they may be. I hope, Mr. Jordan, that this unequivocal statement will be understood as it is meant—sincerely and honestly. I don't think I could go further than that."

Finns Fall Back To New Defenses

at Kollaanjoki, Aittajoki and Kollaa. In addition to 1,000 Russians killed at the later point, the Finns said one propeller sleigh, one armored car and one tank were put out of action.

At Kuhmo and Salla, on Findand's narrow waistline, the Finns said Red army infantry attacks were turned back and that some of the invaders' strong points were captured.

While the fierce fighting continued northeast of Lake Ladoga, Finnish salvage forces were hauling to the rear a long line of tanks, trucks, armored cars, field kitchens, wagons and other equipment of the Thirty-fourth Soviet Tank Brigade, powerful fighting unit which fell victim to the Finns in their latest major triumph.

Brigade in Retreat

All the Thirty-fourth's equipment was pointed eastward, indicating that it was trying to get back home, but its retreat was cut off and more than 2,000 of its troops died at the hands of a smaller attacking Finnish force, the Finns reported. The Finns said the tank brigade fought valiantly and that only a few surrendered.

The Finnish communique said the Russians continued widespread air raids over southern Finland yesterday and that Finnish airmen countered with telling raids on Soviet columns and railway communications.

Finnish civilian casualties were placed at 8 killed and 10 wounded and 17 Russian planes were shot down.

The Soviet repulses at Aittojoki and Kollaanjoki, where the Russians have been attempting to smash across the ice for a month, were reported to have occurred after a series of heavy attacks, supported by tanks, airmotor sleds and other mechanized equipment.

Helsinki had one air raid alarm today, but enemy bombers failed to reach the city.

Kouvola and Inkeroinen were bombed, but no reports of casualties or damage had been received tonight.

British Fighters Shoot Down One Of Own Bombers

London, March 3 (AP).—British fighters pounced upon one of their own planes today and sent the bullet-torn craft crashing to earth near Gravesend, victim of a case of mistaken identity.

One eyewitness told of seeing the three fighters circling around the plane, which he described as a "blue and green" craft.

"Suddenly," he said, "there was a burst of machine-gun fire and I saw smoke coming from the plane. A moment later one of the wings caught fire and then the other.

"The whole plane became enveloped in flames and began to fall to pieces. The tail dropped off and the bomber crashed on open farmland." The admiralty failed to mention any casualties.

Caribbean Sub Scare Was Real, Coast Guard Says

San Juan, Puerto Rico, March 3 (AP).—Members of the crew of the United States Coast Guard cutter Unalga, back from an unsuccessful search for the British ship Southgate, said tonight they believed the Southgate's report of a submarine attack would be confirmed when the vessel reaches port.

They said three messages were picked up from the Southgate late Friday, the first saying the ship had been torpedoed and the other two that she had been attacked by a submarine. The last message, 30 minutes after the first, said the Southgate was not damaged.

There was silence thereafter until late yesterday when the ship, in response to a shore station, said she was safe but not to call her again.

Virginia Gas Tax Collections Increase

Richmond, Va., March 3 (AP).—C. F. Joyner, assistant director and finance officer of the division of motor vehicles, in a report released here, said that January gasoline tax collections were $3,506 in excess of the same period in 1939 in spite of the heavy snow this year that paralyzed traffic for several days.

Reporting that January collections were $1,295,474, he added in his report to the governor that, "present indications are that the February tax will show an increase over the 1939 February tax collections."

Italy Protests Coal Blockade; Press Is Bitter

Note Is Secret But Editor Assails British 'Insolence'

By Charles P. Guptill.
Associated Press Staff Writer

Rome, March 3.—Aroused by Britain's newly-enforced blockade against German coal shipments to Italy, Premier Mussolini's government today presented a strongly-worded protest to the British Embassy.

(Usually well-informed sources in Rotterdam reported Britain had agreed to permit 16 Italian coal ships there to pass through the Allied contraband blockade.

(It was understood that the British had agreed to make an exception in the case of ships which were loading coal when the seizure order became effective.)

The government's action was accompanied by a bitter press attack by Roberto Farinacci, outspoken member of the Fascist Grand Council, who termed Britain's move "an act of arrogance and insolence."

Writing in his Il Regime Fascista, the only newspaper to comment on the coal controversy, Farinacci said the blockade was "the reaction to our refusal to sell arms to England."

"Besides it was hoped to oblige our country to buy coal from Welsh mines and put our ships in peril in the North Sea," he said. "When a fight is waged against unarmed populations and not against armies, any reaction is legitimate."

Farinacci's words gave a hint as to the tone of the Italian note, the text of which was not expected to be made public until its transmission to London.

Diplomats are watching closely the possible effect on Italian non-belligerency.

Since 1935 when the League of Nations attempted unsuccessfully to obstruct Italian conquest of Ethiopia by laying down economic sanctions against Italy, Fascism has become increasingly conscious of her vulnerability to blockade. Any action which emphasizes this situation fortifies the Fascist conviction that this nation can never be assured of its independence so long as it is a "prisoner" in what Italy regards as her own sea—the Mediterranean.

Pressure for Treaty Suspected

Allied with this reaction is suspicion the British are trying to exploit Italian dependence on foreign coal to obtain a trade agreement making certain products of Italian heavy industry available to England. But Italy prefers to pay in agricultural products since her own armament program already imposes a heavy load on her factories.

Italy's annual coal consumption roughly is 14,000,000 tons, of which she produces about 2,000,000 tons.

In 1939 Germany supplied little less than 7,000,000 tons, of which about one-third was water-borne, while England's quota was about 4,500,000 tons.

In recent months Italy has had to ration coal, partly because of transportation difficulties arising from severe winter and wartime conditions.

The long ocean haul from the United States and the present lack of credit facilities there must be considered in connection with American imports.

Germans Bomb British Liner

tonight as heavy aircraft fire was heard at several points, including the lower reaches of the Thames. It was reported that two small fishing boats—the Guiding Light and the Albatross—were attacked. The only damage was suffered by the Albatross, which had its rudder smashed. A Lowestoft trawler and a Newcastle steamer escaped bombs unscathed after the skipper of the latter opened fire on the raider with a machine gun.

Admiralty's Statement

The admiralty statement on the Domala follows:

"Between 4 and 5 o'clock on the morning of March 2, in the light of a waning moon, a German Heinkel bomber overtook the British Indian steamship Domala in the English Channel and cast four bombs, of which three struck her.

"This was a passenger ship which had sailed from Antwerp with 143 British Indian subjects who had been released by the German government and were being repatriated. The captain was killed. A fire broke out amidships. The sea was rough and the work of rescue was difficult. Various British ships and a Dutch vessel rescued the majority of passengers and crew but 20 British out of 48, and 88 British Indian subjects out of 253 are missing and feared dead.

"Many of those saved have sustained injuries. A full list is being prepared and relatives will be informed of all cases as soon as possible. The ship is now anchored in port."

Besides the Indians released from Germany for repatriation, the Domala had 110 Indians in her crew.

Save World From Wolves, Pope Prays

First Pontifical Mass For Rome Celebrated At St. Peter's Church

By the Associated Press

Vatican City, March 3.—Pope Pius XII prayed anew for peace today at a pontifical mass celebrated in St. Peter's for the inhabitants of his native city, Rome, where he was born 64 years ago yesterday.

The pontiff beseeched Jesus Christ "to summon the Holy Concord of all Christian nations in a common universal homage of faith and adoration of love and prayer for the tranquillity and the peace of peoples."

"When empires of the world quake and clash like ocean waves," he said, "when the earth trembles under the roar of cannon, when the seas open up their jaws to swallow men and riches, when in the skies tempests more terrible than those of nature clash over peoples it only remains for us to turn our eyes toward the King of Our Tabernacles.

"Yes, oh Jesus, we prostrate ourselves here on the tomb of Your first vicar, beseeching that all Your peoples scattered over the face of the earth may hear Your word."

His Holiness pleaded that Christ "protect people from wolves and mercenary guardians."

The mass was a new way to celebrate publicly both Pius' birthday and his election to the throne of St. Peter a year ago yesterday. Popes ordinarily celebrate not their election but their coronation anniversary. Pius XII will appear again in the church on his coronation anniversary March 12.

Prelates said today's service was the first special mass ever said by a Pope for the Romans, although 103 of the 262 pontiffs were born in Rome. They added that Pius XII, the first Roman-born Pope in 215 years, probably would make it an annual service.

Thousands of Romans filled the church to cheer wildly for the Pontiff and to kneel for his benediction as he was carried through the aisles.

He spoke in Italian in a clear and forceful voice for nearly 25 minutes. Microphones beside the throne amplified his words for the Basilica and also for broadcast.

Blockade Futile, Nazi Tells Welles

tate north of Berlin, was as hedged by official silence as his Saturday talk with Hitler; but it seemed certain the American envoy again was told of German confidence in military and economic power to attain victory.

Apparently Goering had plenty to tell Welles about German autarchy, in which he plays a prime role as director of the four-year plan for economic self-sufficiency, as well as the air force which he built up as Germany's air minister.

Accompanied by United States Charge d'Affaires Alexander Kirk, Welles was kept at Karin Hall more than three hours and stayed for luncheon, which had not been planned originally.

Welles found Goering full of enthusiasm over an extended week's tour of the Western Front which he completed only yesterday. The Field Marshal not only had inspected air bases and anti-aircraft batteries on the North Sea, but also crawled around bunkers, pillboxes and dugouts of the Siegfried Line.

He was in a jubilant mood, convinced of Germany's military invincibility and aerial supremacy.

Holds Blockade Futile

Of equal importance to Welles along with discussion of German military prowess, was the opportunity to sit opposite the man who at the same time is dictator of Germany's vast economic machine which aims at self-sufficiency.

Goering was understood to have emphasized the German contention that Allied hopes of winning the war through blockade are futile.

As nobody else in Germany could do, Goering could supply Welles with specific data on German production. He was able to reveal for President Roosevelt's private ear economic figures such as never appear in the press nor are made public in any other way since they are considered military secrets.

Welles' visit to Hess was regarded as a courtesy gesture to the Reich's home front and was understood to have been suggested by Germans.

His two calls completed a strenuous three-day program in Berlin before entraining for Switzerland, his first stop en route to Paris and London. His Berlin conferences followed talks in Rome.

As an exhibit to demonstrate to Welles the efficiency of the German air force, Goering had prepared huge photographs taken from high altitudes covering virtually all of England and Scotland.

In effect, he could say "all I have to do is press a button at the Fuehrer's command and the largest air amada in history can start for the British Isles."

The American representative continued to observe the strictest silence, and the Germans, on their part, indicated only the obvious trends of the private discussions.

Through German eyes the visit to Hess constituted the first official American recognition that, to use Hitler's own words, "It is not the state which commands the party, but the party which commands the state."

Hess took occasion, according to authorized sources, "to clear up any mistaken notions about the Nazi party, its tenets and its functions in the state."

The Nazi view was that Welles' previous knowledge of Nazism had gone only from other persons, many of them prejudiced, and that now he should "learn the truth" at first hand.

It was understood Hess tried to interpret Naziism in democratic terms, claiming it is the real expression of democracy in that under the leadership principle a career is open to the poorest as well as the wealthiest. The deputy Nazi leader argued, these sources said, that Naziism came to power at the will of the people and that referenda since had proved the people still stand behind the movement.

Welles arranged to go directly to Lausanne "to do nothing but sleep, sleep, sleep," as one member of his party put it, commenting on the strenuousness of the stay in Berlin.

Germans Open Leipzig Fair; 18 Nations Present Exhibits

War Fails to Block International Trade, Goebbels Tells Delegates; Renews Attack on British 'Plutocracy'

By C. Brooks Peters.
Copyright by New York Times

Leipzig, March 3.—English "plutocracy" was again the butt of the National Socialist spokesman, as Propaganda Minister Goebbels formally opened the annual Leipzig spring industrial fair here this morning.

There were official trade delegates from 15 countries present when Goebbels declared:

"Attempts of British plutocracy to separate Germany from her natural trade partners are hopeless, because the latter know that, in Germany, they have a regular customer, but that seasonal or occasional business, based upon political speculations, is in no way designed to bring about a reliable trade connection."

Sees Ultimate Victory

Germany, on the other hand, Goebbels declared, "has never used a political weapon in trade." Nevertheless, at the conclusion, he declared, "for ultimate victory and, with it, the definite liberation of the German people, this year's Leipzig Fair will also play a part."

The fair, the minister asserted, is Germany's "commercial visiting card to the world" and demonstrates not only Germany's willingness to carry on foreign trade during wartime, but also her ability to do so. The British blockade, he added, was doomed to failure from the beginning, because "of counter measures" taken by the Reich's government in the last seven years.

The rest of Goebbels' thesis, now constantly reiterated in the press and by official spokesmen, was that the present war is the result of the selfishness of the Western European "plutocracies," with particular emphasis upon the small number of unemployed in Germany, the large number in England, and the alleged elimination of war profits in German industry, compared to high special dividends announced by some of the British armament firms which he mentioned by name.

18 Nations At Fair

The fair this year is somewhat smaller than usual. The industrial portion of it, furthermore, was dispensed with. There were, however, 6,600 exhibitors this year compared with 6,682 last. There were 18 foreign countries represented, exclusive of the protectorate, but including Japan. Fifteen of these have official delegates here or collective exhibits. Yugoslavia has the largest number of exhibits—75—and her minister of economics, Dr. Ivan Andres, was present at the opening ceremonies this morning.

America was not represented, and no American buyers have as yet registered, although a booth for their registrations was provided.

The exhibition halls, which are scattered all over the city, were jammed the entire day. The 1,110,000 square meters of space sold to exhibitors was filled with samples of everything from postcards to a bomb-proof air-raid cellar.

U. S. Athenia Victims to Sue For $700,000

Claims Filed Against British Owners May Clear Sea Mystery

By Walter Fitzmaurice
International News Service Staff Writer

Claims aggregating $700,000 have been filed with the Athenia's British owners on behalf of 120 Americans hurt, maimed or killed when the liner blew up.

Filing of the claims put survivors in position to begin lawsuits which may settle the greatest maritime mystery of the European war—how was the 13,000-ton vessel destroyed?

Outbound from the British Isles to Canada with 1,300 Canadian and American refugees, the Athenia was rocked by a terrific explosion off Malin Head, Ireland, the second evening after the war's outbreak. She stayed afloat 14 hours.

Next day the British Admiralty's First Lord, Winston Churchill, in a statement, said the Admiralty had evidence a German submarine torpedoed the ship.

Germany countered with a charge that Churchill, himself, had the Athenia blown up to make "another Lusitania case" and involve the United States in the war.

George A. Nugent, Washington international lawyer, representing the claimants, said damage suits attempting to fix the blame will be filed in "the very near future" in the New York Federal courts.

Neither Cunard-White Star nor its operating subsidiary, the Donaldson-Anchor Line, the Athenia's owners, has shown the slightest inclination for an out-of-court settlement of the claims he filed with them, Nugent said.

Their disposition, he explained, has been to stand pat on Churchill's charges of German guilt, ascribing the vessel's loss to an act of war or "force majeure" which, under admiralty law, relieves the owners of all liability.

Nugent said:

"Sympathies of most of my clients are with the Allies, but they feel the Admiralty has been afforded ample time to establish a case against the Germans, if there be one.

"Moreover, the Athenia's ticket contracts required passengers suffering injury to file claims within six months, barring which the line disclaimed responsibility.

"To allow the Admiralty further time for investigation, we proposed that the line's agents waive the six months' limit, but they claimed they had no authority to do so."

Constituting a cross section of the American public, Nugent's clients include college professors, students, housewives and professional men. His death claims include 6 of the 26 Americans killed.

800 Greeks Attend Mass By Archbishop

Service Is Celebrated For Delegates Here For Ahepa Banquet

Led by the new Greek Minister to the United States, 800 members of Washington's Hellenic community yesterday welcomed Archbishop Spyrou Athenagoras, head of the Greek Church in the Americas.

His golden, crown-shaped mitre sparkling near towering candles, the gray-bearded priest celebrated pontificial mass at St. Sophia's Greek Orthodox Church for delegates to this evening's national Ahepa banquet.

Making his first formal visit since plans were disclosed for transfer of the archdiocesan headquarters from New York to Washington, the archbishop lauded the citizenship program of the Ahepa order.

Speaking in his native tongue, he said Ahepa ideals are synonomous with the democratic ideals of America—and added that religion and democracy must always walk hand in hand.

Greek Envoy Attends

Grouped on the marble rostrum were the Greek Minister and Madame Diamantopoulos, the legation counselor and Mme. Depasta; Attache and Mme. Kountourytis and Dr. John Constance, of Georgetown Hospital, said to be the oldest physician of his nationality in America. He is in his early seventies.

Seated in front pews were national officers of Ahepa, including V. I. Chebithes, of this city, supreme president. Speaking at the service, he urged stronger ties of brotherhood through such organizations as the order.

Other officials were Dan I. Nomikos, Chicago, Ill., supreme vice president; Louis P. Maniapis, Louisville, supreme secretary; John G. Zanas, Indianapolis; Constantine Ecenomou, Youngstown, supreme councilor; George E. Loucas, Weirton, W. Va.; George Papaeleas, New York, and Constantine Halikas, Montreal, all supreme governors.

Senators To Speak

The Rev. Aemillianos Laloussis, pastor of St. Sophia's, and Deacon Theodoric Koukinakis, of New York, assisted in the rites at which a choir directed by John Chrysostom chanted Byzantine music.

Youngsters from the congregation's Sunday school entered the church during the service, took places on the rostrum, and later welcomed the Archbishop and the Greek diplomats on behalf of the school. Irene Polis presented flowers to the Minister and his wife, and Helen Gerales recited a poem.

Senator Wheeler, Montana, will speak at tonight's banquet, set for 7 p. m. at the Mayflower Hotel, which is expected to draw more than 1,000 people, including dozens of legislators and civic leaders. Other speakers will include Senators Schwellenbach, King, Walsh and Herring and Representatives Fish and Celler, the Greek Minister and the Archbishop. Chebithes will be toastmaster.

A Sweet Run

Candy Kiss Seller Wants the Presidency

By the United Press

Bridgewater, Mass., March 3.—Clyde Coburn, a candy kisses merchant running for President, said tonight the main obstacle in his coming campaign was how to get carfare to reach the Republican National Convention.

"I been a little short of ready cash lately," said the 62-year-old aspirant to the White House, hauling forth the lining of an empty pocket in his mustard-colored corduroy pants as proof.

"But you bet your life I'll get there if I can and I'll tell 'em a thing or two about running national politics."

Yes, Sir, He Tells 'Em!

There was scant doubt that he would not keep this first campaign promise, since candy butchering and "telling 'em" has been Coburn's business and recreation for the past 27 years.

A battered scrapbook containing scores of acknowledging letters from such world personalities as Queen Marie of Rumania and the Duke of Windsor showed that Coburn had told them plenty, particularly about his world peace plans.

And his neighbors said his normal wordage output had doubled since he announced his candidacy for the Republican nomination last Friday.

Born in Troy, Vt., he likens himself to another Vermonter who became President—Calvin Coolidge—in that double-C's are evident in both names.

Dewey's Too Young

"We're independent, fighting stock in that State," Coburn said, adding that he favored Candidate Thomas E. Dewey because "his name is the same as another fighting Vermonter, Admiral Dewey."

"The only trouble with Dewey is that he's too young for President, but I'll take him in my Cabinet along with Herbert Hoover, who's going to be my chief adviser." Coburn has an eight-plank platform, the first of which is to put the teachings of "Christ at the helm of this Nation."

Next he is going to call an international peace conference at Washington and "extend Adolf Hitler the right hand of brotherhood."

The second of a series of meetings on juvenile delinquency conducted by the League of Women Voters of Montgomery County will be tomorrow at 10 a. m. at the home of the leader, Mrs. James Cope, Burnt Mills Hills, Md.

Members of the Juvenile Court committee for the county invited to attend include Mrs. Margaret Fisher, Mrs. Ralph A. Wells and Mrs. Philip Bradley. Other sessions will be every Tuesday morning at the Jesup-Blair Community House.

K. Roosevelt Recruits 500 To Aid Finns

By the Associated Press

London, March 3.—Kermit Roosevelt, second son of President Theodore Roosevelt, said today he expected to reach Finland "soon" as leader of an international brigade to fight Russia.

Clad in the uniform of a colonel of the "British Contingent of the International Expeditionary Force," Roosevelt told a press conference at his luxurious Ritz Hotel suite that his unofficial army has 500 experienced fighters and hopes to have 3,000.

It was the first time he had made any public declaration since the Finnish Aid Bureau announced his selection to command the force.

His resignation as a major in the British army, a commission taken soon after the war started last fall, was accepted Saturday by King George. An hour later he was sworn in as colonel of the international force.

Pale from a recent bout with 'flu and speaking slowly because some of his teeth were removed recently, Roosevelt explained that he regarded Finland's cause as "part of the war for preservation of ourselves against the Gestapo and OGPU (German and Russian secret police)."

His brigade will fight to the tune of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," Roosevelt said, adding that his father thought it should have been the American national anthem.

The present force includes Englishmen, Canadians and some Americans, and "we could use 2,000 more Americans," said Roosevelt.

He predicted the Finnish-Russian War in a few weeks will settle down to guerilla fighting in rains and spring thaws.

Mrs. Roosevelt said she was going to join her husband outside of England but would not disclose whether she would go to Finland.

The United States Embassy said Roosevelt still has an American passport and American citizenship since he joined the British army without pledging allegiance to the King which would have deprived him of both.

C. I. O. Refused U. S. Report on Mine Blast

By Alfred Friendly

The Bureau of Mines has refused to furnish the C. I. O. with its official report on the Bartley, W. Va., coal mine explosion January 10 that cost the lives of 91 miners, it was learned yesterday.

The request, made by the United Mine Workers Union, was said to have been turned down on grounds the bureau has no authority to make public results of its disaster investigations.

The union's demand for the report, however, may serve to bring to a decision a conflict between Interior Department policy heads and Bureau of Mines officers over the practice of keeping the reports secret. Broad aspects of this conflict, it was learned, were in large part responsible for the dismissal early in January of the bureau's former chief, Dr. John W. Finch.

The bureau, under Finch, had long maintained that it was unwise to make public results of mine accident investigations and had been reinforced in this position by a local opinion that, in the absence of specific authority, the bureau was forbidden to publish the reports.

As a result of the union request, however, department attorneys were reported to be reconsidering the ruling and may soon hold—perhaps today—that there is no specific prohibition against making public bureau findings. As a result, the report may be placed in the hands of the C. I. O.

It is believed Interior Secretary Ickes favors this policy and that opposition to it from bureau officers, when mine disaster cases arose in the past, was one of the causes for Ickes' blast following the Finch resignation. He accused "a bureaucratic clique" in the bureau of being antagonistic to his objectives.

A larger phase of the same issue, also highlighted by the C. I. O. request, is the bureau officers' alleged opposition to the pending Neely mine inspection bill, which Ickes has indorsed.

The legislation would give the bureau authority to investigate mines at any time, whether or not a disaster had occurred. At present, the bureau has access to a mine only if the mine owners grant permission.

The investigation of the Bartley disaster, one of the worst in American coal mining history, was made when the bureau entered the mine for rescue purposes shortly after the explosion.

The Federal Diary is disturbed by a recent press release of the U. S. Housing Authority to the effect that more than 1,000,000,000 bricks have been used in the slum-clearance program, an amount sufficient to build a "high wall" across the continent.

The question is, how high? Our mind's eye is not content with this vague reference to "high." It has no clear visual image of what the USHA press boys are driving at. Is the wall high enough to prevent Kansas from peeking over at Nebraskans? Can little boys climb over it without endangering youthful bones? Or is it so lofty as to constitute a menace to trans-continental aviation? Is it a well-built wall, with good foundations? And was it union made?

We have persisted, with our own amateur mathematics, in an attempt to figure this thing out, but in vain. If there must be a wall to butt our heads against, let us know, at least, its dimensions.

Calendar: The Interior Department Recreation Association will hold a St. Patrick's dance March 16 at the Cairo Hotel . . . The Federal Trade Commission, now 25 years old, will be the subject of a special issue of the George Washington University Law School's "Law Review." The 500-page volume will be published this week . . . Carey McWilliams, author of "Factories in the Field," the economic counterpart of "Grapes of Wrath," will be heard at The Bookshop, 916 Seventeenth street northwest, at 8:30 tonight.

Planes Battle As Western Armies Idle

Belligerents Lose 9 Ships in Fights; Scouts Kept Busy

By the Associated Press

Clear, brisk weather over Western Europe during the week-end sent Allied and German warplanes on a series of extensive reconnaissance flights which produced numerous dogfights over the idle armies in the Maginot and Siegfried lines.

Nine warplanes were accounted for in official British, French and German reports on week-end Western Front aerial fights.

Germany claimed three French planes were shot down Saturday and a fourth was downed yesterday in a big battle between four German planes and 12 French pursuit craft in the Moselle River sector. The Germans admitted two Nazi planes were missing.

Britain said she accounted for two German planes Saturday and a third yesterday.

France said her pursuit planes downed two Nazi craft on French territory Saturday.

The German high command reported that Nazi scouts penetrated to the Paris district Saturday in reconnaissance flights.

France's own scouts were reported to have flown far into Southern Germany. One returned riddled with bullets and a second fled home unscathed after encountering 13 German Messerschmitts.

The British air force reported renewed aerial scouting of Germany which carried again to Berlin Saturday night for the fifth time in six days.

Royal Air Force planes reported they dropped leaflets and parachute flares.

The British said ground batteries outside Berlin opened fire but that Nazi planes did not challenge the swift scouters, all of which were said to have gotten home safely.

German authorities ridiculed the British report.

"Did you see any flares, hear any antiaircraft fire or find any leaflets?" they challenged.

DNB, German official news agency, poked fun at the British, declaring:

"The medical capacities of the entire world are faced with an unsolvable enigma. Unusual sleeping sickness has broken out in Berlin, whose frightful details have just become known through official and semiofficial announcements in London.

"According to these announcements, British fliers not only appeared over Berlin, but it develops that the friendly British arranged a gigantic fireworks' display, that they were welcomed with ear-splitting thunder and—that Berliners slept through it."

The German high command reported that its air force "scouted over the entire North Sea from before sunup to late afternoon Saturday."

Countering this, London said British reconnaisance fliers drew stiff fire from German guns during flights over the German naval and seaplane bases on the islands of Sylt, Norderney and Borkum.

Nazi Troops Trapped

Paris, March 3 (AP).—The second French ambush in two days was reported by the high command tonight to have trapped a new contingent of German troops west of the Vosges Mountains.

The French, at the same time, acknowledged the Germans had captured "a few prisoners" during patrol raids in the Lauter sector."

Hoover Appeals For Million Now To Help Finland

New York, March 3 (INS).—Herbert Hoover issued an appeal today for another million dollars for the Finnish relief fund.

New emergencies are arising daily, Hoover said, among the civilian population of Finland. He said "the fund is in need of continuous support to serve these humanitarian purposes. We need another million dollars for immediate use."

Wiley Urges Aid

Newark, N. J., March 3 (AP).—Senator Wiley (Republican), Wisconsin, appealed last night for American contributions to Finnish relief "to stop Communism on the Mannerheim Line."

Wiley, addressing 1,500 persons at a Finnish relief fund benefit sponsored by the United Scandinavian Societies of New Jersey, said "if Communism conquers Finland and the other Scandinavian countries," he continued, "it will have an outpost on the Atlantic."

Balkans Insist On Neutrality, Dr. Sarich Says

Although the Balkan states are pursuing different policies toward the belligerent powers in Europe, they are united in their determination to keep out of the war, Dr. Bozidar Sarich, attache of the Yugoslav Legation, said last night.

Dr. Sarich was guest of the Washington International Club at dinner at 1708 New Hampshire avenue northwest. He emphasized that he was not speaking for the legation.

"Whatever divergences may exist among the Balkan countries today, it would seem that a sense of common interest is strongly taking shape, so that all the Balkan states are equally resolved to safeguard their neutrality," he said.

Youthful New Zealand Flier Tells Fantastic Tale of Battle

German Plane Abandoned Fight After Riddling His Ship With Shot, He Declares; Collapsed After Landing

Copyright by New York Times

New York, March 3.—A British official wireless broadcast recorded by the New York Times tonight recounted the story of a battle with German fighters as told by a 21-year-old New Zealand pilot.

On patrol with another plane over the German frontier he sighted two German bombers and gave chase.

"I called instructions into my radio telephone for the other pilot to draw up closer," he said, "but when I turned to see if he was complying I found not my companion but a Messerschmitt on my tail. He blazed away, and shock number two came when I saw one of my wing tips disappear.

"In a matter of seconds I was sandwiched between both Messerschmitts, the other having come at me after bringing down the other pilot.

"Well, there was a lot of twisting and turning and the Germans seemed to be firing all over the place. Then I got one of them and the last I saw of him he was going down in flames. The other one kept shelling me, tearing a huge hole in my engine.

"The rush of oil spurted into my eyes, blinding me, and a great cloud of black smoke from my damaged engine choked me. I said to myself, 'enough of this,' and decided to bail out. But when I felt for my parachute shoulder straps I found they had slipped off. I put on my oxygen mask, turned the gas full on, and just sat in my seat, gliding down, waiting for what I felt sure was the end.

"For some reason the Messerschmitt above shot past and went off home without firing a further shot. I suppose he thought I was finished. I managed to land on the edge of a French aerodrome and climbed out simply covered in oil and fell flat on my face.

"The fumes and the excitement were all a bit too much for me. The French rallied 'round with brandy and a fire engine and ambulance, and I awoke in a hospital after what seemed several hours. In the next bed was a French pilot who had also been shot down that day, so we had a party."

Rumania Devalues Leu 50 Per Cent; Rate 211 to Dollar

Copyright by New York Times

Bucharest, March 3.—Rumania today devalued the leu by 50 per cent in terms of gold, beginning March 10. The change will not affect values of the leu in relation to the currencies of Italy, Germany and the Balkan nations, with whom Rumania has special agreements. The new leu dollar rate will be 211.65, instead of 141.

This step is little more than legalization of an existing state of affairs.

Zionist Assails Palestine Policy

Boston, March 3 (AP).—Dr. Chaim Weizmann, president of the World Zionist Organization, said tonight the present policy of the British government regarding Palestine "stands condemned and will fall under the weight of its own injustice."

Referring to the disclosure last week that orders had been issued enforcing land regulations under which Arabs in the population are forbidden to sell to Jews in the greater part of Palestine, Weizmann said:

"Without discussing the legal and international implications of this action, it is not conceivable that we shall admit of the creation in Palestine, in our national home, of a ghetto—of a pale of settlement reminiscent of Czarist Russia.

Sheen Speaks 3 Times in Day

New York, March 3.—The Right Rev. Fulton J. Sheen, Catholic University philosophy professor, who collapsed from illness and overwork two weeks ago, made three addresses today, and announced he would take a two or three month vacation beginning at Easter.

Msgr. Sheen, who twice left a hospital sickbed last week to carry out speaking engagements, said he would convalesce "probably in Arizona."

Today he delivered Lenten sermons at St. Patrick's Cathedral and over the N. B. C. "Catholic Hour," and spoke at a Communion breakfast in the Commodore Hotel.

300 Chinese Drown In 'Air-Raid' Panic

Shanghai, March 3 (AP).—Three hundred Chinese men, women and children were reported today to have been drowned off Ningpo when they became panic-stricken and caused their launch to capsize upon hearing cries of "Japanese planes are coming."

Only 40 persons were said to have survived.

Clergy Fear Crime Rise From Race Bill

Betting Would Bring Undesirables to D. C., Ministers Assert

Washington clergymen lashed at the race track bill yesterday, some saying it would increase crime in a city where a crime wave already exists.

"In the name of decency I am against it," said the Rev. Dr. J. Hillman Hollister, pastor of Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church. "It would bring gambling into town, and all that goes with it. I am against it and all of my people are. I am 100 per cent against it."

The bill, sponsored by Senator Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, drew hearings Friday and pro and con arguments, Reynolds himself observing that "no one is going to be victimized by horse racing unless he wants to be victimized. Nobody is forced at gun's point to place a bet."

One Withholds Opinion

Asked for an expression, the Rev. Dr. Oliver J. Hart said "I don't know enough about it to express an opinion now." He is pastor of St. John's Episcopal Church Lafayette Square.

But the Rev. Dr. Rufus Weaver, executive secretary, District of Columbia Baptist Convention, said "I am against it strongly. There is no elaboration. I am aganist it and against it."

The Rev. Dr. W. L. Darby said: "I am strongly opposed." He is executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches.

Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, of the Washington Hebrew Congregation, said that in general he is opposed to gambling but "I know nothing of this bill or what its effects might be."

"Undesirables" Feared

Wilbur LaRoe, jr., 4800 Linnean avenue northwest, a lay leader in the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church, who appeared before the hearing on the bill, was emphatically against it.

"A track carries with it a crowd of undesirables, and it would contribute to the crime prevalent here," LaRoe said.

The Rev. Dr. Robin S. Gould, pastor of the Francis Asbury Methodist Church, said "I am opposed to all legalized gambling. It would bring in undesirable elements, also."

The Rev. Dr. Horace E. Cromer said that "no argument can be made for it. I am unalterably opposed to it and will continue to be." He is pastor of Emory Methodist Church.

The bill would legalize parimutuel betting. Having introduced the bill in the last session, the North Carolina Senator now is demanding action on it.

"I am unalterably opposed on moral grounds to racing or any other kinds of gambling in the District of Columbia," commented Dr. G. Ellis Williams, superintendent of the West Washington District, Baltimore Conference, Methodist Church. "Our competent but undermanned police department has enough to do in fighting crime without importing into our city a large number of questionable characters who follow racing," he said.

Towns Flooded In California And Kentucky

Louisville, Ky., March 3 (AP).—Water from rain-swollen Salt River rolled nearly 5 feet deep today through streets of Taylorsville, oft-flooded, low-lying county seat town of 900 about 30 miles southeast of Louisville.

County Judge E. J. Snyder reported 200 to 300 persons had been forced from one-story homes.

Colusa, Calif., March 3 (AP).—Flood waters tumbling through a bad break in the Sacramento River levee covered all but one four-block stretch of the main street in the town of Meridian just before dawn today.

Those of the town's 400 residents who had not already been taken away, and hundreds of other flood refugees from surrounding farm lands, huddled in the small strip of land until rescue boats arrived.

News of Capital Night Clubs

By Mary Harris

ZOOM UPWARD: Night spots are buzzing with a wave of heavy new business that's developed in the last week or two. Headwaiters are wearing out pencils in taking reservations, velvet ropes are standard week-end equipment. It means that the first "Lenten lull" is over and folks are full of that springtime urge to go places . . . Reopening of a couple of closed places also looms. The Trans-Lux management is considering numerous bids for the Hour Glass and it is probable that Bamboo Gardens will reblossom with a new management in a few weeks. Agents for the former Pirates' Den also report that consideration is being given various offers for the spot.

IMITATION OF AN IMITATION. When Evelyn Knight, of the King Cole Room, was singing in Florida this winter, the orchestra's drummer used to put on a blonde wig and give an imitation of Evie singing "Wabash Blues" . . . Now Evelyn is working up an imitation of the drummer imitating her. It'll be ready in a week or two.

UNVEILINGS. A dozen-odd talented new people will step into the spotlights on bandstands and in floor shows this week. Here is the line-up:

Troika. Most exciting news is that Luba Malina, the "International Bombshell," will return to Troika on Thursday. And Luba is a bombshell, no mistake. Since she practically set the Troika on fire last season she's appeared at the Waldorf-Astoria and Versailles in New York, the Chez Paris in Chicago. Her Troika engagement is limited, so never miss . . . Beginning tonight the Troika will begin a new policy of presenting entirely different revues at the dinner and supper sessions, also a table d'hote supper. P. S.—Cornelia Otis Skinner had a corner table at Troika last week, stood up so that she wouldn't miss a bit of that revue a la Russe. She dined regally on blini and fresh Beluga caviar.

Mayfair. The Rhythm Boys (Al Dary, Irvin Switzer and Ray Kulz) will open at Mayfair tomorrow. These lads are Paul Whiteman grads, have played at the Casino-on-the-Park and Ben Marden's Riviera in New York, followed Harry Richman as stars in London's Cafe de Paris, made pictures with Jack Buchanan in England and have sold soap, safety razors and sunburn cream in great quantities via the air waves. They must be tremendous.

Hi Hat. Ray Harts and his Diplomats will make their debut today in the Ambassador Hotel's Hi Hat. Sounds very appropriate. Between them the four Diplomats play 12 instruments, are said to be versatility incorporated. They also sing quartets, duets, trios and solos. Angie Rodante, whose contralto is in fine fettle again, will be warbling with the new unit.

Shoreham. John Elliott, star baritone of musical comedy and radio, will make his bow in the Blue Room tonight. Those captivating morsels, the McNallie Sisters and Dancer Talia, are held over.

AL DARY,
piano player with the Rhythm Boys opening at the Mayfair tomorrow

Lotus. A mysterious Frenchman, M'sieu Duval, will offer a "surprise" in the new Lotus show, starting today. Dancers Carol and Ashton are another New York importation. The Tip Tap Girls will march out as drum majorettes. P. S. The Tip Tap Girls scored a No. 1 hit last week at the Cosmopolitan Club's party at the Carlton.

NEPTUNE 'CTURE. Bert Granoff wearing a maroon carnation with matching tie and hankie. But he vowed his socks were black . . . Manager Fred Thomas, of the Earle Theater, catching an afternoon snack . . . The Earle's Maestro Joe Lombardi with a lovely blonde Rocket from the Capitol. Isn't that treason or something to the Earle Roxyettes?

GIFTS, VOLUNTARY AND OTHERWISE. Remember those handsome rose and crystal ash trays at the Robin Hood? They're not there now. But they wern't lifted. Manager "Mac" McCarthy combined generosity with canniness by just giving them to the patrons as souvenirs. . . . That reminds us that Mayfair hasn't a single one of those fancy green salt and pepper sets left . . . And we must look around the Carlton lobby to see if any of those heavy crystal ash trays, recently set out, are still around.

HARRINGTON TAVERN. One of the pleasantest and most dignified of the downtown places is the Harrington Tavern. The lighting is soothing, the drinks are tasty and of a potency an dyou can choose from any number of savory snacks and light lunches. The prices are right, too

TOP MELODIES. Pete Macias and his Lounge Riviera Orchestra are planning to give quite a whirl to the "Streets of Paris" (National Theater) tunes this week . . . That quaint one, "The Girl With the Pigtails in Her Hair," was given a completely charming debut on Saturday in the Mayflower Lounge by Maxine Tappan . . . Eddy Brandt (Metronome Room) is vocaling "One Cigarette For Two" with accent on the heart throbs.

THAT MAN. Nightingale's Bill Downer was caught in a snowstorm the last time he returned from New York. But little he cared. For he was bringing back both original and extra lyrics for "The Man Who Comes Around," now the midnight panic at Nightingale.

SCATTERBRAIN NOTES. Matt Windsor, of the Anchor Room, is very proud of a letter he's received from Secretary of War Harry Woodring congratulating him on the song he composed for the President's birthday . . .

Honest Approach

Senator Robert A. Taft added more than a cubit to his political stature by the address on foreign affairs which he made before the National Republican Club in New York last Saturday.

Senator Taft was speaking to an admittedly partisan audience. He was thus under temptation to ring the changes on the mistakes and dangers of the Administration's foreign policy. He did not succumb. His speech was anything but a partisan effort. It was, on the contrary, the speech of a man who disapproves some steps which President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull have taken but at the same time approves much of the Administration's foreign policy. Obviously he has no desire to make the international relations of the United States the football of domestic politics.

The Ohio Senator's approach to the problem of foreign relations is frankly and honestly empirical and suffers from the inevitable handicap of dealing with every situation on its own merits aside from questions of general policy. It is not certain, for instance, that any real good is served by treating the Finnish problem, the Allied-German war and the Far Eastern situation as separate and distinct questions requiring separate and distinct answers unrelated to one another.

Yet it should be said to his credit that Senator Taft is not afraid of being charged with inconsistency. He is thus critical of President Roosevelt's stated intention of using "measures short of war" against the European aggressors but, at the same time, is willing to have Congress vote an embargo on Japan if the President and Secretary of State are prepared to recommend it.

This speech makes clear, however, that Senator Taft would be the last to insist that he knows the answers to all the questions. Like almost everybody else he is groping his way in what is often an impenetrable fog. Unlike some of his rivals, however, he is prepared to admit it.

Such honesty requires courage and that courage the Senator manifested in full measure in his Saturday speech. No partisan in his attitude toward foreign relations, he is equally no doctrinaire. He reveals himself as a man who has the capacity to think in national terms, the touchstone being whether a certain policy will or will not be to the best interest of the United States.

Third-Term Repartee

Ernest K. Lindley's report of a conversation between President Roosevelt and a "stalwart of the Democratic Party," appearing in The Post today, will be read with both intense and widespread interest. Mr. Lindley is a well informed columnist whose sources of information regarding White House policies are particularly reliable. So it may be assumed that he has given an accurate view of the President's attitude toward running for a third term.

The conversation reported by Mr. Lindley, moreover, sustains well informed opinion from various other sources as to what Mr. Roosevelt's intentions are. Many careful observers have concluded that he does not wish to carry the burdens of the White House for an additional four years. Yet, in case of emergency, it is believed that he would yield to a draft-Roosevelt movement.

Even if every sentence of the conversation reported to Mr. Lindley is accurate, however, it fails to clear up the third-term mystery. The President reserves to himself the right to say whether any international crisis which may develop during the next few months warrants a request for his renomination. Indeed, his view of the war in Europe and the relation of this country to it may have changed since he sent Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles to the belligerent capitals of that continent, or since he has had time to think over the whole situation during his fishing trip.

It may even be said that Mr. Lindley has added another question to the third-term riddle. If Mr. Roosevelt has decided not to run again unless the Germans overrun England and head in our direction, why has he not so informed the public? Leaders of the Democratic Party have lost few opportunities to express their eagerness to begin mobilizing public sentiment behind other aspirants if the President is out of the race. Yet he has permitted his name to be formally entered on the Illinois preferential primary ballot.

No anonymous White House visitor can clear up this mystery with finality. Democratic chieftains are anxiously waiting for a statement directly from the President himself. And they will remain on tenterhooks until he satisfies their demand.

Antiquated Schools

Washington's antiquated, insanitary, and inadequate schools, with their dingy classrooms, poor ventilation and irregular heat, are once more front page news. The committee appointed by the Commissioners last August to survey these ancient buildings have given new emphasis to an old and familiar story. It has prepared another school-building program. But there the city's authority to cope with this long-standing problem ends.

The investigating committee, headed by Capt. J. L. Person, Assistant Engineer Commissioner, added an ironic touch to its report by citing previous studies of a similar nature since 1882. Six reports on inadequate school facilities have been made during the last 60 years, four of them since 1925. The fact that the Person committee now requests the replacement of 34 school buildings, practically all of them more than 50 years old, indicates how little attention has been given to previous programs worked out by local authorities.

Nevertheless, the current report once more thrusts before Congress the deplorable state of many elementary schools in the Nation's Capital. It comes in response to efforts of Senator Overton, chairman of the Senate subcommittee on District appropriations, to bring about a systematic rehabilitation of neglected schools. This origin strengthens the hope that the report will have a favorable reception on Capitol Hill. At least part of the program may be authorized before it is lost in the next shift of personnel on the District appropriation subcommittee.

Senator La Follette's reference to the "scandalous state of disrepair" of Washington schools indicates also a growing interest in the problems of education here among legislators who control Washington's purse strings. If Senators who are familiar with these conditions take a positive stand when the District supply bill is under consideration, they should be able to substitute new schools and improvements to the city's welfare institutions for the National Guard armory now provided for in the budget.

It is not merely a question of providing the 9,200 pupils now attending obsolete schools with healthful places to meet. What the Person committee recommends is a modernization of the educational system in effect at these institutions. In addition to being old, these schools are small and unsuited to present teaching methods. Small buildings are more expensive to operate than the proposed 24-room structures now favored by school authorities, and they offer much fewer educational opportunities.

Repair of the old buildings could not possibly overcome their deficiencies in design. In the circumstances the committee rightly concluded that the best policy is to proceed with a program of replacements over a period of seven years. It will not be easy to finance this program calling for more than $1,000,000 per year. But it may well take precedence over less essential projects of the ornamental type included in the local budget every year.

Citizens ought to realize from the very beginning, however, that there is nothing automatic about seven-year improvement programs for the District. If our public schools are to be brought up to minimum standards, a determined campaign for appropriation of the necessary funds will have to be conducted in each of the seven years.

Rising Unemployment

Col. Harrington, head of the Works Projects Administration, reports that the January recession in industry and trade has been reflected in a "substantially greater than seasonal increase" in unemployment and relief needs.

The greater than seasonal decline in industrial and commercial jobs was accompanied by a less than seasonal increase in agricultural employment. Partly due to the severe weather experienced in the South, the number employed on farms at the end of January was reported to be the smallest for any corresponding date in the preceding 15 years. As a result more than 1,000,000 persons were added to the ranks of the unemployed during January.

WPA rolls have consequently expanded, with about half a million more persons engaged on WPA projects at the end of January than at the end of September. More persons were drawing unemployment compensation benefits in January than at any time since the spring of 1939. Col. Harrington intensifies the gloom of this unpromising picture by announcing that the decline in employment has wiped out practically all the gains made since August.

A report of this tenor, coming at a time when Congress is trying to keep down expenditures, may appear to be a form of special pleading. But unfortunately the facts speak for themselves. And they tell a familiar story—namely, that our method of dealing with jobless men provides no permanent solution of the unemployment problem.

Some encouragement may be derived from the fact that since the depth of the depression nearly 7,700,000 additional workers have been absorbed in private industrial and commercial pursuits. But, in spite of these gains, we still have an acute unemployment problem on our hands.

That problem should be the Nation's foremost concern, for until it is solved there can be no prosperity for the country as a whole—only a partial and unstable recovery.

The Racing Bill

A large amount of important legislative business affecting the District awaits Congressional action. The local income-tax law is threatened with revision; reorganization plans are under discussion; school and welfare needs must be given attention, and the District appropriation bill must be passed. Yet, with so much to do, a subcommittee of the Senate District Committee has taken time out to discuss a bill to legalize racing in Washington.

The proposal has been brought forward repeatedly, but the objections raised against it are as valid as ever. Residents of Washington who wish to enjoy this sport, or to indulge an irresistible urge to gamble, can satisfy their desires at nearby race tracks. To establish a track within the District limits would draw business away from these neighboring tracks. So any local gains would, to a large extent, be offset by losses elsewhere. Moreover, there are social and economic disadvantages connected with legalized racing that could not be offset by any direct economic benefits which might follow its introduction into the District.

Senator Capper does not exaggerate when he says that a race track here would be "a menace to the great body of Government employes, who have little enough income anyway." That is likewise true for the rank and file of District residents privately employed. For in communities where access to race tracks is easy and attendance encouraged, the gambling habit is likely to spread among people of limited means with demoralizing effect.

Racing also attracts to communities where it is permitted many hangers-on who pick up a precarious living by dubious means. A city like Washington, where housing facilities are overtaxed and police protection inadequate, certainly cannot afford to encourage a type of sporting activity that would make conditions worse than they now are.

A final decisive reason for objecting to the establishment of a race track within the District is that local sentiment is emphatically hostile to the proposal, as Commissioners Hazen and Allen pointed out at the hearings on the bill. Even in this disfranchised community the wishes of the residents presumably have some weight with the lawmakers. Indeed, they should have enough weight to put an end to futile, time-consuming discussion of the bill to legalize racing.

Resisting Pay Cuts

Addressing a meeting of several hundred Department of Commerce employes, a national organizer of the United Federal Workers of America the other night urged a campaign against any attempt on the part of Congress to cut salaries or reduce staff in Government departments.

When the operations of any department are curtailed, fewer people are needed to run it. When relief outlays are reduced, fewer people are employed on WPA projects and there is less need for the services of higher-paid administrative employes. Indeed, the inevitably unfortunate effect upon individuals of Government economy moves makes softhearted legislators reluctant to wield the pruning knife, and it further provides politicians with a perennial excuse for resisting efforts to reduce Geovernment outlays.

If organized Government workers go on record as opposed to any economy program entailing hardships for Government employes, they are thereby virtually pronouncing their intention to fight all constructive economy moves. For there is no way of cutting Government costs except at the expense of persons on swollen Government pay rolls.

That is one of the reasons why the so-called emergency services tend to become permanent Government agencies. That is why it is so risky to take on new functions in the expectation that they will be only temporary.

It has been learned that a Western farmer has tripled his acreage in the past several years by using money the Government paid him for not raising things to purchase more land on which not to raise more things. Ain't planned economy wonderful?

"In the Hawaiian language there is no word for weather."—Newspaper filler. Well, in the English language there is no adequate word for most of the weather we have to put up with.

"Is the skunk a friend of the farmer?" asks a writer. We don't know. A lot of them when running for office claim to be.

Then there was the man who was so nearsighted he had to use a microscope to read a billboard.

With the exception of a boy in a bathroom, a tornado makes the biggest mess.

A Panning For Pegler

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I am distressed and most concerned about one heretofore hero—Mr. Pegler. Pray tell me—is there anything wrong? "Bishop Pegler," he now styles himself. As I scanned his writings long ago, I drew from his own words that he was one who had reformed after his prohibition day experiences and observations, and I fear from his recent rantings, and "Bishop Pegler," that something has gone wrong and that these hectic times are "getting him," to use the language of the street.

MARY DULANE.

Washington, Feb. 27.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Of all the inane drivel that has appeared in the American press the current labor balderdash of Westbrook Pegler is out in front by a mile. Most of the know-it-all journalists get hep to themselves when suffering from mental aridity and go off on a bender, but not Westbrook. He slips into the role of Lewis Carroll and takes us up the river. He even does the dreaming for us.

Doesn't Mr. Pegler realize the yellow-dog contract was outlawed by the American people through its Congress years ago? If he doesn't let him consult the Statutes at Large. The American plan has a mossy tombstone by now.

Has he ever been on the receiving end of a justified strike and observed the slimy tactics of employers' undercover agents? How they endeavor to break the morale of the strikers' wives by attempting to cut off credit with groceries and dairies? Of course he hasn't. He is just a sheltered contract hack who never had any real subjective labor experience.

As to some of his other muckraking forays, he should remember that the Author of Christianity told a sinner to "Go in peace and sin no more." He was no harper on past offenses.

CHARLES E. CROSS.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

We object to Mr. Pegler's recent writings. We think religion in any form too sacred for a mind as small as his and as to the Rev. Father Coughlin, we listen to him and find nothing he has said to be wrong, which can't be said for Pegler and Dorothy Thompson.

Census Questions

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

It is true a guilty conscience needs no accuser. No doubt racketeers, burglars, gamblers, swindlers and income tax dodgers don't want the census taker or any one to know the source of their incomes, but the rank and file of American citizens appreciate the fact that the Government needs these data to ascertain conditions of our citizens, and very few have any fear of publicity.

JOHN RIGGLES.

Seabrook, Md., March 1.

"Our City—Best Policed"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Your cartoon in The Post of February 29 is a masterpiece of timeliness on unfortunate Washington conditions and deserves more than passing consideration. Without attempting any criticism of a generally recognized inefficient official, whose greatest accomplishment seems to be getting his picture frequently in the Washington papers, the statement that "Our city is the cleanest, best policed and even has the best traffic system," judged by the current record, is not only in poor taste but more inconsistent and deceptive than any public statement by a Washington official in a long time.

As to traffic conditions, the writer, who recently spent a 3-week vacation in Florida also, would like to submit one outstanding comparison that almost instantly attracts a visitor's attention: actually there is more peace-disturbing auto horn-blowing and blasting in Washington in one-half day than in a whole month in Miami. There intersection signs apparently mean something.

FRED L. WILLEY.

Washington, Feb. 29.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Your cartoon of February 29 entitled "Our City—Best Policed" has more truth than poetry in it. Crime is on the increase in this city and something should be done about it.

As a citizen and property owner and a reader of The Post, I would like to offer a few suggestions concerning our local government. If the citizens of the District were given the right to vote, conditions here would greatly improve; we want to vote just as much as citizens in other cities.

I feel certain there is not a property owner in the District who would not be in favor of having a mayor and board of aldermen govern the District. They would be given the power to turn out of office the incompetent Jeeters and Rip Van Winkles. There is not a property owner who would not be in favor of having the tax on real estate reduced, as well as having other taxes reduced. Every citizen is in favor of having the Police and Traffic Departments improved.

The citizens of Washington should cease being made guinea pigs by young and inexperienced legislators who take much pleasure in making the people of the District miserable. The voteless citizens of Washington are disgraced in the eyes of other citizens who have the vote, and something should be done to remove this disgrace from our fair city. Taxation without representation is tyranny, and contrary to the principles of liberty. Citizens of the District should not be obliged to pay taxes in pursuance of laws which they have no voice in making.

When the chairman of the Board of Commissioners stated "Our city is the best policed" he was either trying to fool the public or is fooled himself. The people of Washington know nothing of his talents, unless his wavering inconsistency and desire to have his picture published in the papers be a mark of genius. The deplorable conditions existing in the District are alarming enough to rouse the attention of every citizen, who pretends to a concern for the public welfare.

The "Three Wise Men" who govern our city should see to it that the District Home for the Aged and Infirm, the Children's Receiving Home, and the Industrial Home School, all a disgrace to our city, be made decent places for human beings to be housed. The only time the "Three Wise Men" know about deplorable conditions in the District is when a gracious lady like Mrs. Roosevelt visits our institutions.

A Cry For Justice

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Riding a bus the other day two men passengers were discussing the recent brutal murder of a storekeeper by two Negro thugs. One of them stated that Negroes were a menace to society. Being a Negro, I was much pained by this statement.

I am a law-abiding citizen with as much respect for law, order, and justice as any man in these United States. I think I can truthfully say for law-abiding Negroes that we do not encourage crime or criminals, and that we abhor Negro criminals as much as we do criminals of any class or racial identity. What these passengers, as well as many more whites, fail to realize is that the cause of these atrocities can be traced directly to their own doorsteps.

Negroes constitute 10 per cent of the population in the United States, but 10 per cent of the employed are not Negroes. The average personnel officer, shopkeeper, or any person that hires an employe will circumvent the Negro applicant when he is up for employment and will use him as the last resort. In our own Government set-up here in Washington less than 2 per cent of the employes are Negroes, and the few that are employed are in the lowest economic bracket.

Negroes do not ask to be given more than the ratio of jobs that they must have and deserve, but we do think that by every law governing any of the theories of economics we should get 10 per cent of the jobs. Give the Negro a chance to work and he will prove to be the good citizen that he really is, and will not be the so-called "menace" as he was labeled by the bus riders.

Let's rectify the cause of these crimes and criminals—we'll find that the results will not be so painful. Negroes do not want to rob and steal for an existence. They want the right to earn it honestly. They want to contribute their pro rata to humanity and in turn want to be remembered 10 per cent in the distribution.

Norway's Position

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The growing danger to Norwegian neutrality, manifested in the Altmark affair, is the direct result of belligerent use of her territorial waters for purposes of war. Three ships are reported to have been torpedoed by submarines operating in these waters, and Germany is known to have utilized them for months as a corridor for avoiding the Allied blockade.

It is a fundamental principle of international law that a neutral must not allow a belligerent to utilize its neutrality for war purposes. If Norway continues to fail in the fulfillment of her neutral duties toward the Allies, the latter will presumably extend their activities into her territorial waters, and Germany may then carry out the threats she is making at Oslo. So Norway's present position looks decidedly perilous.

There appears one way out of this position for the Norwegians. If they should mine one small section of their territorial waters, all shipping would have to pass outside them at this point. This would prevent Germany from using them as a means to avoid the blockade and so preclude Allied intervention.

In taking such action, moreover, Norway would only be fulfilling her duties as a neutral by a means which is undeniably within her sovereign rights. Whatever new dangers it might create could hardly be as grave as those she now incurs by her present policy.

The Post Impressionist

Vim, Vigor And Vitamin B

I know now just how Jack's mother must have felt when she looked out of the window and saw the beanstalk winding its green way into the morning sky. She probably accepted the wonder as a miracle, but more than likely the only difference between the beanstalk beans and the ones she cooked for supper was that the former had been soaked in a concentrated solution of vitamin B-1.

The first I heard of B-1 was at the bridge club, when I ruined a finesse by trying to hear what the dummy at the next table was saying.

"The most marvelous thing, girls. They had been ailing all winter until I started them on vitamin B-1. And you should see them now!"

I groaned, but not over my lost queen. It's an affliction to be a conscientious mother in this day of scientific feeding. I envisioned another expensive little brown bottle which would soon, no doubt, be keeping company with the cod-liver oil on my pantry shelf, and it was a great relief to find that Ann was talking about her geraniums, and not her twins.

Soon after, my sister called to say that she had bought a bottle of B-1—enough to make 4,000 gallons—and would I like a thousand or so for my plants? She arrived that evening apparently empty handed, but from the mysterious depths of her purse she drew a bottle which might have been large enough to contain a pill.

We made up a solution, anointed the window box with a cupful, and left the rest in a big blue pitcher. The next morning a begonia, hitherto dejected and drooping, was lifting up its waxy leaves with a definite show of good cheer. I poured another cupful from the blue pitcher, administered the dose, and went about my business.

By night the weary begonia showed a bud. The next morning the bud was a blossom, and the modest lilies of the valley and violets were asserting themselves in a brazen and forthright manner. The plants in the window box stretched up and out, and I spent my time gloating over new leaves and sprouts.

My husband declared that B-1 had nothing to do with it—that any flowers would thrive under the lavish attentions I showered on my pets, watering them every day and poking around the soil, loosening it with a hairpin. But I saw him carry a bottle full of the solution out to his pet climbing rose.

Why wait for spring, I thought, when we might just as well rush the calendar a few weeks? We looked the yard over that afternoon, the children and I, for new material, but the only verdure we could find was a clump of iris, frostbitten and forlorn at the tips of the spears, but hopefully green down toward the tubers.

We tried using a trowel, but finally resorted to an ice pick, for the frozen earth clung to the roots with the tenacity of winter itself. We brought our trophies in and planted them, confidently and expectantly.

"Mother." My young son was meditative as he dabbled a grimy forefinger into the solution. "Do you suppose my finger would grow if I kept it here long enough?"

I patted the dirt around the iris. "Certainly not, Donnie. You would have to drin——" I stopped in horror, realizing what I was about to say, but it was too late. Donnie, whose twin heroes are Tarzan and the Superman, had caught the inference. I remembered the story of the mother who told her children not to put beans up their noses. The less said, the sooner forgotten; but the blue pitcher was put on a shelf high above the youngsters' reach.

Within a week the new iris foliage was spreading fan-like, as green as jade, and a thickness down toward the roots indicated the presence of buds. I sat by the window with my sewing, and the bleak sky outside did not seem dismal at all.

Large wet flakes of snow were pelting down, and children coming home from school left dark footprints on the whitening sidewalk. Looking at them, I began to sigh, perhaps over the fleeting days of childhood, and perhaps over the pile of little dresses on the table beside me, with their hems ripped for lengthening.

There was a great stamping outside the door, and the children marched in, Donnie like a general, and Mary, a small orderly a few paces behind. The army made off for the kichen, where a fresh batch of cookies awaited the attack.

I should have known better than to finish basting a hem before investigating the dragging of chairs and the excited undertones. When I put down my sewing and went back to see, I found the blue pitcher on the table with two empty glasses beside it. The vitamin B-1 solution was gone.

That was three days ago, and thus far there hasn't been any great change, although Donnie broke off four buttons today. And I keep wondering if I let those dress hems down far enough.

Danish Outlook

By Joachim Joesten

Awakened Courage

Special Correspondence of The Post

Copenhagen, Feb. 8 (By Mail).

FINLAND'S heroic fight against overwhelming odds has had many consequences on the European situation, some direct and forseeable, others indirect and unexpected. Among the latter, not the least noteworthy was the heartening effect which the heroism of the Finns, and their hitherto amazingly successful resistance, has produced upon the Scandinavian nations, in particular Denmark.

The end of last year saw Denmark in a depressing mood. The first effect of the Soviet onslaught on Finland was anything but heartening; like everywhere else, people here (both laymen and military experts) were prone to underrate the staying-power of a small nation fighting for its life against overwhelming numbers and machinery.

That was the outlook in Denmark—and in a way for Denmark—toward the turn of the year.

"PERSONALLY, I feel more depressed than I have ever felt before," admitted Prime Minister Thorvald Stauning in a New Year interview with the Copenhagen Politiken. It was in this mood that he delivered, on New Year's Eve, a radio address that contained some of the most defeatist utterances which Denmark has yet heard from the mouth of a leading statesman. About the country's defense, he said textually:

"Owing to the natural conditions of our country, we have been unable to set up—even though we had wanted to—defenses comparable to those of other countries, and this state of affairs, together with the aversion for war which the Danish nation have developed, has placed Denmark into a position that precludes the very idea of effective military preparedness."

The contrast between this policy of resignation and the stubborn fight which at the same hour was put up by the Finns was too striking to escape notice. It was further enhanced by the fact that the two countries are almost equal in numbers of population (Denmark has 3,777,000 inhabitants, Finland has 3,787,000). The natural protection which Finland's forests, tundras and lakes afford to that country has a counterpart in the advantages which Denmark draws from her insular position. Finland has 1,400 kilometers of land-frontier to defend, Denmark only 55 kilometers; as regards the threat from the air, Copenhagen is no nearer—indeed only about half as near—to the German coast than Helsinki is located to the Esthonian, where the Soviet air bases are established.

No doubt, military experts might discuss for hours which of the two countries is more unfavorably exposed to attacks from its great power neighbor, but even the layman can see, with a bit of common sense, that Denmark can't be much worse off than is Finland.

Such is the gist of a protracted, impassioned, press controversy which followed in the wake of Stauning's New Year speech, and to which the public lavishly contributed with a spate of open letters, "letters to the editor," protests, suggestions, and so forth.

Most remarkable in the lot was a vehement open letter which Col. Alf Giersing, commander of a regiment of Royal Hussars, published in the two Conservative dailies of Copenhagen, Berlingske Tidende and Nationaltidende. It contained such sharp criticism of the government's defense policy that the Minister of Defense, Herr Elsing Anderson, considered it his duty to administer the colonel a formal rebuke.

However, for all the regrettable slips of tongue and pen the public discussion of such a ticklish matter necessarily involved, its final outcome proved distinctly to the good. The Danish nation, aroused by the magnificent example which the Finns were giving to the world, seemed to awake at last to a keener sense of the risks and necessities of the hour. The clamor for a clarification of the government's defense policy grew with every day that passed and presently the party leaders in the Folketing realized that nothing except a clear-cut statement that Denmark was determined to defend her neutrality and independence could keep the public temper from rising dangerously.

SO, ON JANUARY 19, the House was presented with a resolution which was jointly mowed by the leaders of the four major parties, to the effect that:

The Folketing has resolved to declare that the whole Danish nation are agreed that the country's neutrality shall be maintained and that the means at its disposal shall be used, if necessary, to assert and defend Denmark's peace and independence, the House declares its support of and the House declares its support of the cabinet in working for these ends."

The great, and on the whole favorable, reverberation which this demonstration has had both in Denmark and abroad (notably in the northern neighbor-countries) showed that people everywhere had been waiting for the Danes to manifest their will to fight for their neutrality and independence as unmistakably as Swedes and Norwegians, Belgians and Netherlanders had done before them. But—did this resolution really indicate a change of mind, or was it to be taken as just so much eyewash and pretense with everything going on as before?

To this skeptical query the answer was given with commendable quickness when Defense Minister Alsing Anderson, on January 31, announced that the government would shortly propose to the Folketing an extra appropriation of 50 to 55 million kroner for defense purposes and that some 85 million kroner had already been used, since May 1937, for purchases of material only. Although these sums may not seem too impressive if compared to the neutrals (Sweden is now spending on defense close to a billion kroner a year), they certainly do mean a great deal for Denmark.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Cautious Citizen

I have my views on how to live
And what I ought to do;
At times I feel the urge to give
My countrymen my views:
I have opinions on each task
Confronting us each day,
But what, I have to stop and ask,
Would John L. Lewis say!

II.

I like to think I have a right
To sit and think things out—
To see 'em in my own mind's light
And maybe speak or shout;
Some issues I would speak upon
And air my views a bit—
But have to stop and think if John
Would ever stand for it.

III.

My country means a lot to me
And I would guard it from
The things that menace people free
And put 'em on the bum;
I like to voice opinions stiff
On measures good and bad,
But have to stop and wonder if They'd make John Lewis mad.

IV.

I think I am entitled to Speak freely, and I hope
I have the same right this to do
As any other dope;
But this I must consider when
I think of such a move—
Is there a single chance in ten
John Lewis would approve?

V.

Quite often my opinions touch
Big issues of the day;
My thoughts may not amount to much
But still I feel they may;
I'd offer my suggestions good
And point a proper path,
But, gosh! I have to wonder would
They stir up John's wrath!

VI.

I'm fairly brave, as such things go,
And keen to duty's call;
A feeling in me daily grows
I should express it all;
Before I speak, though, I shall pray
For guidance more and more,
So anything I have to say
Won't make John Lewis sore.

We understand from tourists returning from Florida that Admiral Byrd has decided to spend the winter there hereafter, as it is one spot where that motor sled will come in handy.

Elmer Twitchell would like to see a Gallup Poll taken to see whether there should be any more Gallup Polls.

Back Home Stuff

Col. Ward Morehouse, the old Confederate, recalls the days when John Barrymore played in "The Fortune Hunter" and it fills us with nostalgia. We remember the opening at Bunnell's Hyperion back home, and John Barrymore wasn't in it. Thomas W. Ross had the role before Barrymore, and we always liked him in it better than we did John. John hadn't even developed a profile in those days.

It was a swell comedy and the big laugh scene was the country store soda fountain, when the Village Hypocrite came in and asked for plain soda. He had a nervous twitch which gave the impression of winking as he ordered it. And the clerk with an "I understand, sir," put a slug of whisky in his glass. It was a wow when the old fellow came back a little later and ordered another with the remark, "Young feller, that was the best plain soda I ever had in this town."

The United States Army has a war plane that can rise almost straight off the ground and then pause in mid-air. We hope it isn't under the impression the next war's going to be a circus.

Manpower Factor

By Barnet Nover

The Real Offensive

THE SIX months that have elapsed since the outbreak of hostilities in Europe last September have revealed a number of striking similarities between the present war and the last.

But the differences between the two wars are very much greater than the similarities. And of these differences undoubtedly the most important is the apparent determination of both sides to be as sparing as possible of their military manpower. This attitude is in sharp contrast with the prodigality displayed both by Germany and the Allies in the conflict of 1914-1918.

At the end of six months of the first World War the casualties on the Western Front alone exceeded a million. And that was only the grim prelude to the wholesale and continuous slaughter which followed and which bled the nations white. Yet long before the half-year mark was reached in that conflict the two sides were already locked in as tight an embrace as characterizes their military situation today.

APPARENTLY the generals and statesmen have learned something from the World War. If they can help it, they are not going to sacrifice a generation in what may prove a futile attempt to break an unbreakable line.

The latter-day battles of Verdun are being fought in Eastern Karelia, not on the Franco-German border. Russia may be willing to make enormous sacrifices in manpower to achieve a strategic gain. As against tiny Finland, Russia has manpower to spare. Great Britain, France and Germany have not. They cannot afford to imitate Russia's tactics or their own tactics of 1915, 1916 and 1917 without courting immediate disaster.

It is not humanitarian considerations alone, however, which prompts them to be miserly of military manpower. Joffre in launching a great offensive in Flanders at the end of 1914 was no more a butcher than is Gamelin, who has carefully stayed his hand. Sir John French in launching his disastrous attack at Neuve Chapelle on March 10, 1915, was as interested in victory as is Viscount Gort.

The difference between the present Allied military leaders and their predecessors of a quarter of a century ago is that the former have been able to learn from the sad experience of the latter. And, by the same token, Brauchitch is not eager to repeat the prodigality displayed by Falkenhayn at Verdun.

OFFENSIVES were extremely costly during the World War. In view of the superiority of present-day defenses over those of 1914, in view, also, of the enormous increase in the fire power of a mechanized modern army, offensives are certain to be even more costly today.

Could any commander be sure, however, that victory would follow an offensive in the West or elsewhere, the temptation to attempt it might override all other considerations. But no such guarantee can be given. And all the belligerents in the West are worse off, so far as manpower is concerned, than they were in 1914 for the very reason that military mechanization has made such vast progress in the intervening period.

IT WAS TRUE in 1914—it is even more true today—that the army which a nation put into the field was only the spearpoint of a national effort involving every man, woman and child in that nation, all of its industrial, economic, financial and psychological resources.

Without that vast army behind the lines, the men in the front lines could not function and it takes no fewer than eight workers in the factories and on the farms to support one soldier.

In this particular the Allies are better off than is Germany. Cut off by the blockade whose pressures can only partially be offset by overland or trans-Baltic trade with neighboring countries, Germany must depend to a very large extent on her own manpower to supply her with the needs of her armies and her civil population. And to the extent that she is forced to depend on uneconomic devices—replacing imports by Ersatz products—a larger percentage of her available manpower is perforce monopolized by industry than needs be the case of Great Britain and France.

With sea lanes open and with their financial resources unexhausted the Allies can draw on the industrial manpower of overseas countries to supply a certain portion of their needs, and can specialize on those activities which they can perform with the relatively fewest number of men.

IT IS THIS circumstance, among others, which is behind the pressure in Allied countries for the creation of new fronts. The more fronts there are, it is argued, the more men Germany must keep under arms, the less able the Reich may be to concentrate a sufficient number on any front to win by striking a knock-out blow. For Germany cannot, without weakening her industrial apparatus, expand her army indefinitely. The Allies are not handicapped to the same degree. On the other hand, German industrial efficiency is probably still much greater, despite the exigencies of the war, than that of either Great Britain or France.

DURING these six months there has been no offensive in the West. But both sides have been carrying on an unceasing offensive in the economic sphere—the Allies by their blockade, Germany by her U-boat, mine and air attacks on Allied and neutral merchant ships and Allied men-of-war. Such activities have, in both instances, been designed to reduce the enemy's capacity to employ its civilian man power with the greatest degree of efficiency, and thus ultimately to weaken the enemy forces at the front.

In the last war the blockade was the supplement of military action and was overshadowed by it. The situation is now reversed. Thus far a military offensive has appeared to both sides the least efficient form of that war of attrition which they have been waging. The war, up to now, has been primarily a war against civilians. And it will continue to be waged primarily against civilians even if the long-threatened offensive now occurs.

Landslides Delay Bridge Approaches

Winchester, Va., March 3.—Indefinite delay in the completion of approaches to the highway bridge across the Shenandoah River at Castleman's Ferry seems likely with further slides from the western slope of the Blue Ridge mountains threatening to block the roadway.

Work on the approaches which have been blocked twice has been suspended temporarily. It is reported here a conference between State and Federal road authorities is to be held. It was deemed dangerous for workmen to continue because of large fissures detected above the road.

Some consideration is understood to have been given to the proposal that the approach on the eastern end of the bridge be moved north of the original location. Another alternative offered by T. O. Palmer, junior engineer on the project, is that work be suspended until late spring.

The bridge, one of the largest in this section, was finished last fall but has not been put into service.

Madden Praises G. M. Labor Stand

Chairman J. Warren Madden of the National Labor Relations Board today praised the cooperation of the General Motors management and the unions involved in arriving at a basis for a collective bargaining election among the concern's 125,000 employes in 59 plants.

In a statement, Madden said:

"The stipulations saved perhaps several months of costly technical hearings concerning various phases of the corporation's far-flung enterprises. Not only did the corporation and unions agree, but C. I. O. and A. F. L. unions agreed among themselves. Such cooperation between men and management illustrates an approach to the complicated problem of collective bargaining which can result only in serving the public interest."

Fair Enough

Those FBI Files

THE PROPOSED investigation of the Federal Bureau of Investigation would be an investigation to investigate investigations. It would shock most of us, but it would subdue our inquisitiveness, because it would smear so many of us. The FBI has more dirt on more Americans, including Senators, Representatives, labor leaders, Governors, mayors and members of the political families of the New Deal Government, than the foulest whelp of an open-air grand jury bred to a commercial blackmailer of the press, radio and screen could reefer up in a thousand and one nights under the goofy spell of the toxic weed.

We have developed a gossip and slander technique in the legislative assemblies of our Nation and her component States. When any considerable group wants to get or discredit somebody or some movement, we persuade some Senator or Representative, or some State Senator or State representative, to start an investigation.

In the States the politician selected for this duty may be, and likely is, an illiterate racketeer incapable of writing a coherent letter, much less a legally admissible resolution or bill, or there is always a legislative sweatshop at hand in which school-taught civic and intellectual prostitutes will whip indecent intentions into constitutional shape.

THE FILES of the FBI in Washington contain legal proof of perfidy by hundreds of thousands of Americans—a majority of whom, it may be hoped, erred once and forever after obeyed the laws. These records, suddenly released, would humiliate other Americans in geometrical proportion, and let it not be thought that only Wall street bankers and boss politicians would be so embarrassed.

The FBI cooperates with local police departments and with the Treasury and other departments of Government. Its tickler-files and unconfirmed data, if disclosed for publication as privileged matter by a Congressional committee investigating the FBI, would louse up some of the families of this Republic.

But the FBI is no worse than the United States Congress, for Congress not only gave this bureau its OGPU authority, but, since then, has dug preferred dirt out of its files for particular purposes. The whole Government has become one great gossip and scandalmonger.

THE FBI is the greatest deposit of personal dirt ever amassed and it is an even question whether the forces of law and order would lose more, or personal liberty and privilege would gain more, by the total destruction of all its files, including contributions from the military departments and the Treasury.

And Congress should remember that grand juries are supposed to conduct their investigations in private. It does a victim no good to report no bill after he has been defamed in violation of his constitutional rights by all his enemies under the protection of Congressional immunity.

So let us have an investigation of the FBI. But let's make it a party, and dish all the tons of dirt about all the hundreds of thousands of convicts and their relatives and the suspects and the near-criminals and grafters. But let's not exclude the chiseling, sanctimonious gyps who have exploited their relationship to persons in high office.

Mr. Welles' Mission

By Dorothy Thompson

They Cry Peace!

MR. SUMNER WELLES' grand tour has a quaint and unreal quality about it. It is very correct and formal. One can see Mr. Welles, properly attired in gray pants and a cutaway, entering the proper salons and offices, dining at the proper tables, drinking the proper wines and saying, we have no doubt, the proper things.

And, of course, wherever he goes there is a proper response (however reserved) to the official if not the actual purpose of his mission. The purpose is ostensibly to express the proper opinion that the United States would like to see peace and to gather information regarding conditions that the governments would consider for peace.

In fact, the "secret mission," which is about as secret as a Hollywood divorce, has, as was expected, allowed all governments to appear in as reasonable a light as they can arrange for themselves, and thus spread in the United States a satisfying feeling that all that our Government can do for peace is being done. That, I have suspected from the first, is the real purpose of this mission; it is certainly recognized as such abroad, and the explanation is to be found in the Illinois primaries rather than in the European capitals.

HOWEVER, the tour also gives the European belligerents an opportunity for presenting their noble intentions. In Germany and elsewhere all peace overtures are invariably accompanied by vehement denials that any peace short of complete victory is contemplated.

The peace campaign is also part of the war of nerves, and has the same unreal quality as Mr. Welles' trip—and the same sort of secrecy about it. There is the perennial story of the Goering-army opposition to Hitler; the good-and-bad Nazi theory. It is put over with a conspiratorial air. Emissaries of Gen. Goering—American and neutral industrialists and diplomats—transmit "highly confidential" information to the President of the United States. It is so confidential that it is also transmitted, confidentially of course, to certain members of the American press. So that all knowledgeable students of foreign affairs know about it. This column knows about it, and so do the leading editorial writers on the New York press. But, of course, Mr. Hitler doesn't! Gen. Goering and Dorothy Thompson share a secret unknown to Hitler. Isn't that silly? Yes, it is. It is idiotic.

THE PEACE repudiated by Germany, but advanced by her, whether as a ballon d'essai, or whether as a possible basis for future negotiations, is gravely considered and debated, no doubt in London and Paris and New York over the dinner tables of those "in the know." Perhaps Germany would be willing to restore Bohemia-Moravia and Poland, provided they can remain included in the German "living space." There is talk of an international syndicate for the exploitation of raw material areas, that is to say, colonial territories. This is a revival of a plan of Dr. Schacht's dating from as far back as the Young plan conference. There is a great deal of sense in it, but it has nothing whatever to do with this war.

The unreal quality of all the discussion arises from a simple and completely neglected fact—the fact neglected at the dinner-table conversations. This war was not made by the governments of democratic countries. Their governments tried to avoid this war, and all the proposals now being discussed were discussed long ago, before the war began, and under far more favorable circumstances.

Germany was plunged into this war by a government whose decisions were subject to no check from the German people whatsoever, but were dictated by one man and his party.

The governments of Britain and France were prepared to let him go ahead. But the people of Britain and France, who still had something to say, were not. Chamberlain was negotiating with the Nazis until the very last moment before the war began. The proposals now being made were being made to Chamberlain before the war ever began. And Chamberlain was willing to listen to them sympathetically. But he could not propose them in England, because the British people would not listen. As far as Britain and France—yes, and Finland—are concerned, this is a people's war.

NOW, since this is a fact, it is well to try to understand what the people, the people of the democracies who insisted that Hitler be stopped, are fighting about. For they will make the decision in the end. If they do not make it at a peace conference or by a decision in arms between nations, they will make it otherwise, in rebellion, yes, even in civil war.

They are not fighting about geography, or colonies, or balances of imperial power. They are fighting to prevent Germany from being strong. They are fighting to prevent the spread of something that threatens, not only their nations, but their individual existences as human beings. They are fighting for human rights, individual human rights.

The issue in this struggle, whether it is a struggle between armies and navies, or whether it is an internal struggle within nations, or whether it is a war of politics and nerves, is the answer to the question: Are people people? Have individuals the right to be human?

This is a war against the brutal and criminal powers that governments have usurped to themselves over all human rights.

The people of the world have at last recognized, not very articulately, to be sure, not as lucidly even as they should and will, but felt, with an apprehension driving them to take a stand, that the enemy of the human race today is what falsely calls itself "government."

IT IS NOT capitalism, not socialism, not any of the old bogies. It is the brutal, naked, criminal power of the runaway state. And they have seen that power spreading, octopus-like; they have seen people, individual human beings, caught by its tentacles, disappear into its maw—millions of them. The most primitive instinct of self-preservation—not even national preservation, self-preservation—mobilized them to resist. For what has it done this naked and undivided power? It has deprived men of all the attributes of manhood, and women of all the attributes of womanhood, and children of all the attributes of childhood.

It has divided families; it has broken into the family cash box; it has engaged in every criminal activity, in murder, and arson, and infanticide. It has bent men's backs to labor of no conceivable human use. It has taken the food from their mouths in order to put guns in their hands and tell them to murder their brothers.

It has torn hundreds of thousands of people, individual people, from their homes, from the houses in which they live and the soil on which they work, and thrown them adrift penniless upon a cold and cowering world.

It has herded them into boxcars and deported them, freezing and starving, to remote places where they are enslaved or starved.

It has gagged their mouths and paralyzed their brains. It has set sons against their fathers and daughters against their mothers. It has defamed the God in whom they had faith. It has set spies upon them. It has beaten and robbed and imprisoned and tortured them. It has made their grandmothers testify against them from their graves and turned their race into a universal term of opprobrium; dirty Jews; dirty Poles; dirty Czechs.

Yes, and to prevent the spread of this, the antihuman, the anti-God, the antiman, the people of the democracies have taken upon themselves their own Moloch, put themselves under their own governments, accepted an unfamiliar and inhuman and dangerous discipline. But to be free. Eventually to be free. That is what this war is about.

SO WHAT is all this peace talk, about geography and raw materials and this and that? These things are important; these things must be men again, to solve them.

The only treaty that can bring peace to Europe must be a treaty signed between governments—all governments—and their peoples. Five taxi-drivers, from Berlin, Moscow, Rome, London and Paris could lay down its essential thesis.

It was laid down 150 years ago in the Declaration of Independence. Men are created free and have rights, and all the rights of governments are granted to the government by the people, and none are granted by the government to the people.

They have the right to live, to love, to have children, to work and to exercise some choice about their work, to think and have access to the great social inheritance of all the world's knowledge, to speak, to express themselves; to acquire some modicum of private property that is secure in law; to be safe in their homes and effects against unwarranted search and seizure; to be free from the pryings of informers and spies; to be judged by their acts and not only by their race; to be immune against imprisonment without an indictment; to be tried in open courts; to enjoy the fruits of their own labor, and to share the social increment of that labor according to their own best judgment.

THIS IS what this war is about—to make universal certain human rights, without which no individual is human.

Before Germany restores Czecho-Slovakia she must abolish the Gestapo.

Before Germany restores Czecho-Slovakia she must abolish the form of war: terror. A free press and a free radio are more important than raw materials, for one must first know what raw materials are to be used for before one knows whether they are desirable or undesirable. If they are to be used to make guns for thugs, it is better for the people to be poor.

The state has become the enemy of mankind, and a worse enemy than plague, pestilence and poverty. The power that the people have given the state, while it posed as Santa Claus, must be wrenched back from the monster it has become. The peace treaty must begin with a Bill of Rights. The hero of the next world revolution is Thomas Jefferson.

Girl, 17, Would Marry Man of 25; Evidence Indicates He Is Furtive Philanderer; Mother Asks Advice

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: A certain young man has been courting my daughter for the past year. He is 25 years of age and she is 17 and in high school. He has asked her to marry him after she is graduated this summer, but I think she should wait until she is 18, at least. However, they are so much in love that she doesn't want to wait another year.

We have known his family for some time and they are very nice people. (His mother is dead, and he lives with his father.) He has gone with many girls, but never for very long, so one day I asked him why he didn't like the girl he dropped after he met my daughter. He said that he was looking for a wife and would never marry a girl like her, because she had affairs with many men. I agreed with his attitude.

A little later I met one of his neighbors, who said she had heard he was calling on my daughter. I remarked that he had been paying her attention for quite a while; that we liked him very much and that he had asked my daughter to marry him. Then she said: "I think you had better tell your daughter not to be in too much of a hurry. She is such a lovely girl it would be a pity if she married the wrong man."

Much as I hate gossip, I asked her what she meant. She said this man has another girl at his house every night, after the father goes to work. I put this down to gossip and never mentioned it to my daughter, because the boy had once asked us to visit him some evening and we had said we would.

Well, a few days later, my daughter and I had gone to a movie and when we started home the car wouldn't work and the man at the parking lot advised us to have it taken to a garage. This we did, and it meant a wait of two hours for repairs. So we telephoned the young man and asked if we could call on him. He said, "Why yes. I would be glad to have you. Come right up."

So we went. We were to call back for the car at 10 o'clock, and at 9:30 we were starting to leave, when someone tried the front door. The young man hesitated to answer at first, but finally opened the door and who should brush by him but the girl whom he had condemned to me. We sat down again, as I wanted to see how she behaved.

She said, "Oh, you have company?" And he said, "Yes," in a harsh manner. She murmured a reply too low for our ears and then ran upstairs, came down shortly and immediately went away. Then my daughter asked who she was and he explained. She said, "I thought you never saw her any more." He made no answer, so we left. Later he wrote my daughter and made some kind of explanation.

Do you think she should marry a man who keeps open house to that type of woman all hours of the night? If she married him, wouldn't she be worried by the woman (and perhaps others like her) afterward? Either he cannot get rid of her or he doesn't want to. If this sort of thing goes on while he is engaged, is there much hope for him? How can I get at the truth of the situation before it is too late? I want to get the thing straightened out in my mind before taking seriously to my daughter.

ANXIOUS MOTHER.

The Girl Is Too Young, The Man Unfit, to Wed

DEAR A. M.: In my opinion, this chap has already hung himself, as the saying goes—if only your daughter has eyes to see the sordid significance of his conduct. First, he damns his former sweetheart to you as a wanton; meantime giving your daughter to understand that he never sees her any more, when all the while he is playing her along as his mistress. This adds up, I should think, to the fact that he is a cad, a liar, a double-dyed hypocrite (in keeping each girl in ignorance of the other's status in his life), a debauchee and a coward. In brief, he is completely unreliable in word and action, a moral weakling through and through.

Also, he has a psychologically distorted attitude toward the sexual side of life; the type of mind which divides womankind into two classifications—(a) those women he deems worthy of wifehood because of their ivory tower of innocence, and (b) their "scarlet" sisters whom he contemptuously cultivates for purposes of self-gratification. The man with this attitude of mind is incapable of giving his wife a whole-souled devotion, because he is invariably emotionally inhibited in relation to the woman he "respects" for her "purity," yet he finds it impossible to revere the woman who is candidly his sensual counterpart.

Emphatically I say this man is unfit to marry your daughter. He would break the heart of any woman who married him with the expectation of finding him always faithful, truthful and emotionally compatible. As the twig is bent, so the tree inclines; and a man who is confirmed in furtive philandering at the age of 25 (while consciously looking for a wife of spotless virtue), will persist in infidelity to the end of his days.

Yet aside from these considerations, your daughter is too young to marry. She is too unformed, socially and mentally, to choose the right mate, with any guarantee that her choice will stand the test of time. And she is too immature physically for the experience of motherhood—since most authorities hold that motherhood is best undertaken between the years from 23 to 30. Give her this view of the precipice she is skirting, and she may reconsider her headlong impulse to get married immediately.

As an attractive young girl of upright character, she has a chance—by exercising good judgment and patience—to find profound happiness with an honorable, emotionally integrated, hardily self-disciplined man. But she will be throwing this chance to the winds if she allows her present infatuation to eventuate in marriage.

These Girls Model Their Own Designs

109 Women, 1 Man Compete In Designing

Original, Attractive Gowns Are Entered Here in U. S. Contest

By Marshall Adams
The Post Fashion Editor.

ONE HUNDRED and nine women and one man were serious enough about fashion design to enter original gowns in the American designer contest sponsored by Good Housekeeping and judged last week at a local store. The women not only designed and made their gowns, but also modeled them. The man entrant, however, displayed his original evening gown—a peach moire dinner costume—on a hanger.

Marshall Adams

Decided originality was evident throughout the showing, both in use of fabric for the design and for the cut, detail and general thought back of the design itself. Over half the dresses modeled were attractive enough to be worn immediately by the enthusiastic mannequins. A few costumes were a bit "busy" or a trifle ornate, but the majority stuck closely to the three qualifications for which the judges looked, originality, workmanship and suitability of fabric to the design and finishing. The jurors were Miss Bab Lincoln, woman's page editor of the Herald Times; Miss Helen Vogt, fashion editor of the Evening Star, and The Post's fashion editor.

Picturesque Gowns

Although not one of the prize winners, one of the most picturesque gowns entered and worn by one of the loveliest models in Washington, was that of Senorita Maria T. Escalante, daughter of the Venezuelan Ambassador, and Senora de Escalante. Her intense coloring and cameo-like features displayed her pink and blue flowered satin bouffant dance gown, with its blue tulle ruchings, to excellent advantage.

The first prize winners (who received $10 each) in the three distinct design groups were as follows: Misses designs, Jennie Gordon, who submitted an exquisitely simple eggshell jersey dinner dress; junior designs, Miss Dorothy Selby, who amusingly showed off her gay cotton plaid suit, accented with whiskbroom straws to simulate Scotch tassels; women's design, Mrs. Clara F. Walters, whose pink linen redingote dress won wide acclaim. There were second prize awards of $5 apiece for each group—but only the major champions are eligible for prizes in the National Designer Competition to determine the best amateur dressmaker in America.

Man With a Car

"George, you'd better get ready a little early . . . Well, Mrs. Putter has to be there by 7 o'clock. . . . Oh, but I told her we'd take her—he's down with his lumbago . . . No, the play's not until 8, but she's in charge of props and she has to get her things there. Oh, yes, and she has to pick up a phonograph at the Dauber's—they're somewhere over in Geranium Heights, you'd better look up the exact address. And you'll have to stop by for Mrs. Twitt—she's in charge of costumes and has a lot of old hoopskirts and things to go, too.

"Me? . . . Oh, I'm not going this trip . . . Yes, you'll have to take two loads because I'm not ready and, anyway, Mrs. Welcher and her boys are coming over to go with us . . . Yes, I invited them . . . Well, I almost had to; she kept hinting, and you know he has the grippe—Oh, there's the phone! I bet it's Mrs. Putter!

"It was Mrs. Ivy. She wants you to pick her up when you go for Mrs. Putter. She has to take her Angora . . . Oh, but the cat's in the show! And say, George, you'd better be careful, because Mrs. Twitt will have her little Jiggs along and he can't stand cats . . . Well, but she always takes him where she goes. They've never been separated. Anyway, Mrs. Ivy and the cat can sit in front with you . . . What? No, I'm not sure about that Ivy address. It's somewhere on Petunia street, but you'd better look it up.

Now, let's see, you ought to be back here around 7:30—Grandma Gadd said she'd be here by then. What? . . . Yes, she's going with us . . . Well, who else would take her? Well, she says taxicabs make her nervous. Anyway, there's plenty of room. We can put the three Welcher boys in front with you and then put Miss Shrink and her mother—what? Yes, they're going with us. Well they're afraid to ride in strange taxicabs at night. Anyway, they're neither one very big, and some of us can sit on each other's laps—or maybe we could put a little box in the back . . . Well, but that only makes eight besides you, and three of them are children . . . Oh, there's that phone again!

"It was Mrs. Goofe. He's going to drive her there, but he won't stay, and she wants to come home with us. Oh, and I told Gracie Moon's mother we'd see that she got home all right. Mrs. Moon doesn't want her coming home with that Arthur Trott.

"Now you better hurry, George, or Mrs. Putter'll be nervous. And if you have to take two loads—say, I almost forgot about that little Mrs. Tinkle and her baby She's so crazy to go, and he's out of town, and I told her just to bring the baby and come on. I wonder if we could possibly squeeze her in. Still, if Mrs. Waddley comes . . . Oh, no, now wait! I didn't invite her . . . No, she just said she hated to go anywhere alone, she was so timid, and you know she has that stiff knee and everything, and what could I say? . . . Anyway, it's not at all definite; she said she'd call, and as I haven't heard from her—oh, there's the telephone now! You know, George, I guess you're going to have to take three loads."

Hyacinth Blue For Bedroom

As pleasantly rejuvenated a bedroom as ever encountered lately was done over in hyancinth blues. The walls were painted in this delicate lovely shade, and a plain rug in the same color was selected for the floor. The curtains, bedspread, dressing table skirt and small upholstered chair were in a large scale floral chintz with hyacinth blue ground and natural color bouquets.

The furniture was a problem, but instead of spreading a modest budget thin and buying everything needed, the owners spent their all on a majestic four-poster bed. Then they made the other furniture "do" by painting it the same hyancinth blue as the walls. Gradually these makeshift pieces will be replaced with mahogany worthy of the bed. In the meantime the room has great charm.

Sausage Cobbler a Distinctive Dish

WHEN THE three flavors of apple, sweet potato and sausage combine to make a crisp cobbler you have a distinctive dish that is as delicious as it is unusual. It is splendid for a main dish and easy to prepare. The following is a recipe for making it.

Sausage Cobbler

Combine 2 cups stiff tart applesauce, with 2 cups diced cooked sweet potatoes and 10 link sausage links that have been cooked, drained and sliced. Turn into a casserole that has been brushed with sausage drippings. Sift flour, and measure to ¾ cup. Resift flour twice with 1¾ teaspoons baking powder and ½ teaspoon salt. Add ½ cup milk and stir in thoroughly; then stir in 2 tablespoons hot sausage drippings. Spread dough over top of casserole and decorate top with 6 partly cooked sausage links and slice of red-skinned apples, quartered and sliced. Bake in a hot oven, 450 degrees, until well browned, about 30 minutes.

Sausage links can be cooked in a number of ways. The method using steam is one of the most successful. Put the links in a cold skillet, add several tablespoons of water, cover and simmer until sausage is thoroughly steamed. Should any water remain in the pan at the end of the time, pour it off and brown the links, turning as needed. In case you are preparing large quantities of sausage that is thicker than the customary link, the oven may be used for cooking it. Put the sausage on a rack in an open roasting pan and in oven at 325 degrees. They will need no attention until they are ready to take from the oven, 35 to 40 minutes later.

Animal Toys

When making stuffed animal toys, select terry cloth or attractive prints for the covers. They can be taken off and sent regularly to the household washer with the rest of the family's effects.

Keeping Gas Bills Down

Have the burners and pilots on the gas stove inspected and adjusted frequently. This will help cut down the gas costs.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

New York, March 3.

AS THE usually by-lined lady has either gotten hold of a bad clam or is off somewhere having fun or committing some small job of ladylike burglary, this space has been turned over to her domestic partner, Alphonsus Dabney Hall, for the moment. I want to yet you in on a diabolical trend which is now visible in New York life, and which threatens the local homes with breaches or extinction.

ᔓᔕ

It began when the invitations to the formal opening Disney's gem, "Pinocchio," hit our various doormats. At the bottom of the usual high church language was the line, "Black or white tie." Thus, for the first time, a picture company had the effrontery to suggest forcibly that all gents turn up for a movie premiere in their iron shirts.

ᔓᔕ

This danger already seems spreading. Last week, La Hughes was bidden to the fashion show which opened the handsome new establishment on Fifty-seventh street, which houses the creative activities of Annette Simpson. Formal dress was indicated. The old wifely holler of "You never go anywhere with me!" rose on the night air, so I toddled along, wearing merely my dark blue confirmation suit. But there were no other rebels. All the other gents were dutifully decked in their dinner jackets. I wasn't self-conscious, the clothes were interesting, the champagne wine flowed like Ole Miss' in flood, and I consorted with several of my very favorite ladies, like the beautiful Jean Spadea, the fashion artist, and Kay Silver, fashion editor of Mademoiselle.

ᔓᔕ

New York has sent at least a score of its most beautiful clothes models to Hollywood, and their hit score in the movies is largely goose-eggs. Among them weer the gorgeous Gwili Andre, and Anita Colby (nee Counihan), and Margaret Tallichet, now the wife of ace director Willy Wyler. It's odd that one of the few real, though fairly moderate, successes is a boy model. Out there he is known as Alan Curtis, but here he was Harry Euberroth, and he is doing right well in the flicks, having been given his first real break by Joan Crawford. Wonder why these breath-taking girls fail in the pictures?

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Gluttony Called Greatest Enemy of Longevity Said to Be More Dangerous Than Drink

"IF YOU bar accidents, gluttony is the greatest known enemy of long life. Fat kills regularly and consistently . . . Gluttony is slow suicide. Fat is a mass murderer." That indictment of adiposity does not, as might be imagined, emanate from a health-minded dietitian! It is the opinion expressed by Ferdinand C. Helwig, M. D., and Walton Hall Smith, a chemist, in their book, "Liquor, the Servant of Man."

After thoroughly sifting the evidence, the authors have arrived at the incidental conclusion that drinking does not compare with eating as a factor in life expectancy. It appears that many more people drink moderately than eat moderately. There is no question that overeating is responsible for a number of ailments—arteriosclerosis among them—which shorten a man's life. On the other hand, it is pointed out, continual experiments tend to exonerate alcohol of any blame in various diseases formerly attributed to it.

And what about the effect of alcohol on weight? The doctor and chemist make it plain that alcohol cannot turn into fat . . . it supplies energy the same as other foods, only faster; but it cannot be used for bodily repair or storage. It must be turned into energy immediately. However, while the alcohol calories are being used in energy, those obtained from food are converted into fat and stored away.

For example, the man who requires 2,290 calories a day to maintain his weight at the same level, gets that number in food. One ounce of alcohol contains slightly over 200 calories. In a highly convivial evening, it is possible to take as many liquid calories as would be supplied in a light meal. While the liquid calories are being converted into energy, the food calories are put into storage. You can see how it happens that the man who drinks is prone to take on weight!

But the way out is not to give up eating! The calories supplied by alcohol contain none of the food essentials. Unless you get these essentials in food, you will develop serious dietary deficiencies. You may wind up with polyneuritis—which is no joking matter. So moderation in drinking is necessary for weight control, if for no other reason.

The business man who must regularly entertain his associates will appreciate the tip passed along by the authors: The use of a small glass of cream as a chaser. For some reason science has yet to discover the fat in milk has an especial affinity for alcohol and interferes with its absorption into the blood stream. A glass of whole milk is a good substitute for the cream. Skimmed milk is ineffectual. If water is used, it should be taken with the liquor, or immediately afterwards. Taken first, it washes away the absorptive surfaces of the stomach and speeds up the process.

Civil Liberties Union Attacked for Adopting Test for Officials

By the Associated Press

New York, March 3.—Dr. Harry F. Ward, professor of Christian ethics at Union Theological Seminary, announced today he had resigned as chairman of the American Civil Liberties Union in protest against "the surrender of vital principles embodied in the recently adopted resolution which sets up tests of opinion for services on the governing bodies of the union."

Quoting from a statement to the press authorized by the board of directors, Dr. Ward, who held his post with the union for 20 years, said the resolution "sets up a 'test of consistency in the defense of civil liberties in all aspects and all places.'"

Sees Communist Blow

"It declares 'that consistency is inevitably compromised by persons who champion civil liberties in the United States and yet who justify or tolerate the denial of civil liberties by dictatorships abroad,'" he said in a statement.

"During its entire existence the union has rigidly excluded from its consideration civil liberties issues outside the United States. It has several times refused invitations to international collaboration in its field of work. The resolution of February 5 now sets up as a test for membership in its board and national committee the attitude of persons toward the actions and policies of foreign governments."

He declared that when the union disqualifies a person "who is a member of any political organization which supports totalitarianism dictator in any country," the resolution becomes "concrete only in relation to the Communist Party."

Refutes Statement

"The inclusion of other organizations is irrelevant window dressing," he went on. "In view of the fact that in all of our discussions over this issue, I have heard no one challenge the record in defense of civil liberties of the one Communist member of the board (a charter member of the union), I cannot agree that mere membership in the Communist Party disqualifies one for service on the governing bodies of the union."

Disagreeing with the board's statement to the press, in which it was said the resolution "merely states what has always been the unwritten policy of the union," Dr. Ward cited the cases of two board members who at different times joined the Communist Party.

"The board would have been in duty bound to point out that their resignations were in order," he said. "The further fact that one of these persons asked the board whether joining the Communist Party made continuance on the board undesirable, and was answered 'No,' proves that the policy of the resolution was not then the 'unwritten policy of the union.'"

Thousand Hear MiCareme Concert In Gaston Hall

Attended by an audience of 1,000 that filled Gaston Hall, the traditional MiCareme concert of the Georgetown University Glee Club last night marked the twentieth anniversary of Dr. Edward P. Donovan as director of the club.

The 65 members of the glee club, largest in the university's history, opened with a choral salutation from Grieg.

In recognition of the centenary of the birth of Tschaikowsky, the club sang "The Gondolier" and couplets from the Russian musician's opera, "Eugene Onegin." "The Handorgan Man," a five-part chorus from Von Othegraven, also was featured.

In keeping with Lent, the club rendered the Ave Maria of Yon, the Ave Verum Corpus of Elgar and Logan's "Lift Thine Eyes."

Kevin M. Cosgrove, '40, president of the club, played a series of violin solos, his "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" from Mozart and one of Brahms' Hungarian dances being particularly popular with the audience. The concert closed with six modern ballads and light opera numbers.

Members of the Georgetown faculty, including the president and heads of departments, attended last night in Dr. Donovan's honor. The MiCareme concert is the only one which the glee club gives on the campus during the year.

Roosevelt Lauds Rivers, Harbors Congress Program

President Roosevelt told the Rivers and Harbors Congress yesterday that development of the Nation's waterways was essential to national defense.

The organization, which will hold its annual convention here next week, made public a letter from the President which said:

"It is gratifying at a time when world events force us to attend more closely to our system of national defense to know that the National Rivers and Harbors Congress has, through the years of its existence, advocated a rational development of our waterways, an element of our communication system essential to the safety and defense of the Nation.

"It seems to me that the great strides we have made during the past seven years in the effective development of our waterways and the solution of flood control problems are in no small measure due to the comprehensive and integrated program developed and forwarded by the National Rivers and Harbors Congress."

Badlands Expedition to Hunt Beasts of 30,000,000 Years Ago

National Geographic to Cooperate With South Dakota School of Mines In Search for Bones of Titanothere

Vestiges of protoceras and titanothere—queerest creatures that ever roamed the plains of North America—will be sought in the West next summer by a joint paleontological expedition of the National Geographic Society and the South Dakota State School of Mines, Dr. Gilbert Grosvenor, president of the society, announced yesterday.

Field work will be in the Badlands of western South Dakota, a fantastic eroded area lying between the Cheyenne and the White Rivers, southeast of Rapid City. Dr. Joseph P. Connolly, president of the School of Mines, will be in charge of the expedition's researches, assisted by James D. Bump, curator of the school museum.

Scientists estimate that the beasts whose bones the expedition hopes to find lived in the Badlands area, then a grass-covered region of rolling plains 30,000,000 years ago. Erosion has disclosed some of the bones.

Among vestiges "mined" the last three-quarters of a century in the area only a few complete skeletons of titanothere, protoceras and rhinoceri have been recovered. Chief aim of the expedition will be to bridge gaps in scientific knowledge of the region.

As reconstructed by scientists, the protoceras was an odd beast remotely related to deer and antelope, with a pair of long slender tusks rare among cud-chewing animals. The titanothere, literally "giant beast," was a sort of elephantine rhinoceros, nine feet high at the shoulder.

The study will consider re-employment opportunities. Announcement was made yesterday by Evans Clark, executive director of the fund.

FHA Administrator Stewart McDonald said he viewed Colean's resignation "with great regret . . . I feel that he leaves a permanent contribution to housing in this country in the first nationwide housing standards and subdivision standards which were set up under his direction."

Employers Ask NLRB Elections In 52 Labor Rows

The Labor Board reported yesterday it had received 52 petitions from employers since it changed its rules six months ago and allowed them to petition for elections when opposing unions claim majority representation.

Prior to the rule change, only employes had been permitted to ask collective bargaining elections. Some businessmen and Congress members had contended this often resulted in damage to an employer who found himself facing conflicting demands from two unions, neither of which would ask an election.

In a statistical summary of its work, the board also reported that 1,026,813 votes had been cast in 2,631 collective bargaining elections since the board began operating in 1935.

Scarred-Face Man Attacks 2 Young Girls

Criminal Assaults Attempted; Chief Of Detectives Hits Crime Wave Report

Two young girls were attacked last night by a man with a scarred face who attempted criminal assault while another man successfully executed three holdups, raising his total in recent days to at least six.

The first attempted criminal assault was on a 14-year-old girl in the hallway of a house in the first block of New York avenue northeast. The man, described as 5 feet 8 inches tall, weighing 140 pounds and with a scar on his right cheek, entered the house by posing as a prospective roomer and seized the girl, tearing her clothes from her and inflicting sprains and bruises.

Three hours later, in a cream-colored, late-model, two-door sedan, a man identified as the same seized an 11-year-old girl at Pennsylvania and Minnesota avenues southeast. Hurling her into his automobile, he drove to Anacostia road and M street southeast where a criminal assault was attempted.

Three Raids Net $7

Another man, already sought in at least three holdups, staged three quick raids which netted only $7.

Miss Jeannette Birch, 18, clerk in an ice cream store at 1331 B street southeast, was held up at pistol point and robbed of $6 in quarters from the cash register. A few minutes later, the same man held up Vladimir Culkowski and his wife, Lucille, in the 1900 block of D street southeast, collecting $1. Shortly afterward he struck again in the 1200 block of Penn street northeast, robbing a citizen of an undetermined amount of money.

Earlier yesterday Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, chief of detectives, ridiculed reports of a "crime wave" in Washington and said "there has been no increase in crime that could be considered alarming in any sense."

Thompson's statement was made as almost 40 colored men, hauled in by a police dragnet, awaited a line-up today in connection with more than a score of holdups, housebreakings and purse snatchings. Several are suspects in the holdup slaying of Herman Sirkis, 42, at his liquor store, 4824 Deane avenue northeast, last Monday.

Sees "Nothing Alarming"

Police yesterday voiced resentment at lack of cooperation from Washingtonians who have been robbed or were witnesses to various crimes. Saturday night only five, of more than a score summoned, turned up at police headquarters for a line-up at which police hoped to obtain identification of a number of suspects.

Thompson said the number of robberies in February exceeded those in January by ten. "There is nothing alarming about this," he said, "because the increase was in minor crimes."

Three thugs took $3 and his coat from William H. Johnson, 1912 Ninth street northwest, after halting him near his home. Similarly parted with $7 by two gunmen was Murray A. Tony, 33, of 409 G street northwest.

Thieves broke into the home of Col. Dumitru Petrescu, honorary aide-de-camp to King Carol of Rumania and military attache at the Rumanian Legation, and took a number of valuables. The burglars, who entered through a basement window, also helped themselves to stock in the wine cellar.

Police continued, however, to work overtime in special details and a colored gunman who attempted to hold up a cab driver early yesterday was arrested less than an hour afterward. The robber, a passenger, stepped from the cab at Thirtieth and M streets northwest before drawing his revolver. The driver, Joseph U. Curtis, 2304 Seventeenth street northwest, stepped on the gas and sped away.

Working from Curtis' description of the man, Private J. W. Baxter, Seventh Precinct, arrested a 35-year-old colored suspect in the 1000 block of Thirtieth street northwest. The man was identified by Curtis.

Home Looted of $500

In Second Precinct, where the concentration of robberies has been heaviest, Privates Charles Burns and L. I. Mason arrested a 28-year-old colored man who was identified by Ruth Rogers, of Alexandria, Va., as the thief who had snatched her purse several hours earlier in the 100 block of M street northwest. The pocketbook was recovered but $15 was missing.

Morton Mack, 63-year-old G. P. O. proofreader, told police yesterday someone broke into his home in the early morning, ransacked the place and escaped with $500 in bills. Mack, who lives at 1759 Hobart street northwest, had intended to go to Florida with his wife next week. The house was entered through a rear screen door which was cut open.

A housebreaker looted the Little Success Cafe, 1357 U street northwest, early yesterday. Philip George, proprietor, told police $30 was taken from the cash register and an unknown amount of money was stolen from the nickelodeon. About $180 of food, liquor and tobacco and a .38 caliber revolver were also taken. Entrance was obtained by removing double bars and a frame of glass from a kitchen window.

Adam W. Leeman, 1714 Otis street northwest, a cab driver, was held up by a 25-year-old white man who hailed the cab at Twentieth and Calvert streets northwest. At Nineteenth and Biltmore streets northwest he stuck a gun in Leeman's back and forced him to turn over his wallet containing $4. The gunman escaped on foot.

Richard Moore, colored, of 1808 S street northwest, was beaten by three colored thugs who robbed him of $7 at Le Droit court and Seventh street northwest. James Cummings, coowner of a restaurant at 1836 Columbia road northwest, told police the restaurant was entered through an unlocked rear ventilator early yesterday and $50 stolen from a cash drawer. An unknown amount of whisky also was taken, he said.

Young Wife Dies in Hotel Mystery Here

Woman, 26, Treated For Hysteria Attack Just Before Death

Police last night were investigating the death of a 26-year-old Washington woman which followed an attack of hysteria in her room at the Lee House early yesterday.

Mrs. Geraldine Anderson died in her fifth-floor room while her husband, Benjamin F. Anderson, awaited arrival of Dr. Jesse L. Hall, house physician. Dr. Hall said Mrs. Anderson was dead when he reached her bedside at 5:30 a. m.

Dr. Francis J. O'Bryan, of 3060 Q street northwest, had been called by Anderson and administered a sedative to Mrs. Anderson at 3:10 a. m., he said. He said Mrs. Anderson had been under treatment for the past year.

An autopsy by Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, failed to reveal the cause of death, Dr. MacDonald said. A chemical analysis of the woman's viscera is to be made today, Dr. MacDonald withheld a death certificate pending outcome of the analysis.

Dr. O'Bryan said Mrs. Anderson came to Washington several years ago from Rome, Ga. Hotel records showed the couple moved there February 25, giving "Washington, D. C.," as their address.

Takomans Rescue Newlyweds Found Living in a Taxicab

Found sleeping in a taxicab that had been their home for the last week, a youthful bride and bridegroom of five months were sheltered in Takoma Park, Md., last night in a place of their own for the first time since their marriage last October.

Tired, hungry and despondent over failure to find employment, the 18-year-old husband, a former cab driver, appealed to a Takoma Park family to aid them in getting a place to live. The family, knowing the youth was without work, did not want to vouch for them to the landlord of an apartment the couple wanted, but gave him and his 16-year-old wife, an expectant mother, enough money for a few meals.

Then the Takoma Park police found them in the cab—asleep. They were referred to the Health and Welfare Center for aid.

Mrs. George Robertson, center chairman, communicated with the Montgomery County Social Service League, whose representative spent a day in getting the couple settled.

Since marriage which both parents of the couple disapproved, the couple had tried living apart in their former homes. A few weeks ago they made up their minds to live together.

The husband had odd jobs which paid him only enough for an occasional meal. They were allowed to sleep in a taxi on Laurel avenue if he would answer calls in the taxi hut during the night. An errand sometimes was repaid with a hamburger and cup of coffee.

The youth's application to the town council for a taxi driver's permit was denied on the grounds that he is not capable of such a job. The last steady work the youth had was in a brush factory in Takoma Park. He was warned by police at that time to find something other than a cab in which to sleep.

"I don't want just a room," the pretty blonde bride told the welfare agency. "I want a place where I can cook and keep house so we can manage better," she said.

The Health and Welfare Center will pay half their rent while the other half will be paid either by the supervisor of county aid or by the Social Service League. Townfolk last night were seeking employment for the husband.

Frank Stickney Funeral Service To Be Tomorrow

Services for Frank Lewis Stickney, lifelong resident of Washington who remembered President Lincoln, will be held at 2:30 p. m. tomorrow at his home, 1443 Chapin street northwest. Burial will be in Glenwood Cemetery.

Mr. Stickney died Saturday at his home after a short illness.

He was born in 1858 at the Hopeton home of his grandfather, Joseph C. Lewis, first Washington insurance agent, on upper Seventh street northwest. As a boy he frequently saw the Civil War President drive by on his way to his summer home on the Soldiers Home grounds.

Mr. Stickney was active for many years in Calvary Baptist Church. He leaves a brother, Bryan H. Stickney, and two sisters, Miss Katharine A. Stickney and Miss Rosamond K. Stickney, both of Washington.

Mrs. Nettie Waddey Dies in Chevy Chase

Mrs. Nettie O. Waddey, 75, widow of Herman B. Waddey, died yesterday at her home, 6904 Brookeville road, Chevy Chase, Md.

She is survived by a sister, Mrs. Louise E. Ballenger, and a brother, John W. Palmer, both of Washington. She was a native of Virginia and before taking up her residence at Chevy Chase 17 years ago, lived in Washington many years. She was prominent in the activities of Calvary Baptist Church, Washington, and for 25 years was treasurer of the Ladies' Missionary Society.

Bees Have a Dance To Denote Nectar

Bees have a dance language, according to an article in the Smithsonian Institution's annual report.

Dr. K. von Frisch, of Munich, has found that a bee, after spotting a nectar-bearing flower, flies back to the hive and executes a peculiar dance which means "nectar nearby." Then the other bees fly to the flower.

Mrs. Roosevelt Forced to Land At Raleigh on Flight to D. C.

Three planes of Eastern Air Lines' flight 16, with 63 passengers from Miami, including Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, were forced by bad weather to land at Raleigh, N. C., last night after turning back from Richmond. The planes, due here at 8:45, were advised by radio of zero-zero conditions at Washington Airport and ordered to land at Richmond.

They found traffic so heavy at Byrd Field, there, however, when they arrived shortly after 9 p. m. that they were sent back to Raleigh, arriving at 9:25. The flight left Miami at 2 p. m.

On the plane with Mrs. Roosevelt, who was returning from a Florida vacation, was Jimmy Moran, veteran stunt man, bringing back half a sunburn. He intends flying to the West Coast this week for a California sunburn on the other half of his body.

Mrs. Roosevelt was taken to Raleigh from the airport in a State Highway Patrol automobile. She planned to go on to Washington by train.

Finn Tells Of Nation's Viewpoint

Willing to Hear Any Reasonable Demand, All Souls' Church Is Advised

Finland has always been willing to listen to any "reasonable demands" from Russia, Lauri Astola, member of the Finnish Legation staff, advised yesterday at All Souls' Unitarian Church.

He told the class in Current Problems, however, that Russia's demands have been too far-reaching for an independent state to accept.

Introduced by Mrs. Florence L. Pierce, Astola assured his audience that while Finland has suffered recent reverses, she is by no means defeated, but warned that immediate help is necessary to stave off defeat.

Special Fund Collected

Meanwhile, Lutheran churches continued their drive for funds to aid the stricken country. A special fund was collected during the morning service at Augustana Lutheran Church. Margareta Sederholm, recent arrival from Finland, sang several solos.

"We must put peace in the American flag if the stars are to remain there," the Rev. Frederick J. Bishop said at Ingram Memorial Congregational Church.

"It is for you men to put peace in the flag, in our government, in our ideals and in our religion," the pastor told a congregation which included more than 100 men's day guests, "so that righteousness, justice, truth, freedo mand liberty shall not perish from the earth."

Prepare for President

The Rev. Mr. Bishop said "we must put peace in our principles of freedom and liberty or else the Statue of Liberty will be just one more crumbling monument to a lost cause."

Meanwhile, plans have been completed for President Roosevelt's attendance today at St. John's Episcopal Church, Lafayette Square, where services will commemorate the seventh anniversary of his inauguration.

Assisting Dr. Oliver J. Hart, rector of the "Church of the Presidents," in the service, set for 10:30 a. m., will be Dr. Frank R. Wilson, rector of St. James Episcopal Church, Hyde Park, N. Y., of which the Chief Executive is senior warden; the Rev. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton School, Groton, Mass., and Dr. Howard S. Wilkinson, rector of St. Thomas Episcopal Church here, local worshiping place of the President.

Dr. Sizoo to Return

Highspots of this week's daily Lenten services will be the return of Dr. Joseph R. Sizoo, pastor of St. Nicholas' Collegiate Church, New York City, to Epiphany Episcopal Church, preaching there today through Friday at 12:05 p. m. Former pastor of New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, here, and nationally outstanding clergyman, he addressed 1,000 people daily at last year's Lenten rites.

The Rev. George H. Bennett, pastor of Wilson Memorial Methodist Church, will speak today at noon at the Penn Theater. Daily services, being sponsored by Southeast Protestant churches, will be in charge of the North Carolina Avenue Methodist Church this week. The Rev. Bernard I. Barnes is pastor. The Rev. T. Rene Meyer, pastor of the Kingsbridge Lutheran Church, New York City, will address tonight's weekly union Lenten rites of local Lutheran churches at Grace Church, Sixteenth and Varnum streets northwest.

Flees Flue

Fire Finds Flaw, Family to Flit

Somewhat like the famous fly and flea, Dr. John Marshall Gaines has fled from a flaw in the flue.

Five weeks ago the Gaines home at 16 Longfellow street northwest was swept by fire which left it in a state which required complete renovation. A defective flue was blamed.

Saturday night Dr. and Mrs. Gaines built a cozy log fire in their fireplace and set enjoying it until after midnight. While Mrs. Gaines was preparing for bed, she saw flames reflected in a neighbor's window and discovered their house was ablaze again.

After a 4-hour battle, firemen got the flames under control and Dr. Gaines estimated damage at $1,500. A defective flue again was blamed.

Dr. Gaines said yesterday he would move.

Foreign-Born Reject Move To Condemn Totalitarianism

Resolution Precipitates Fight at Session Of Delegates From 178 Groups Opposing Restrictive Measures Toward Aliens

A fight over a resolution condemning totalitarianism, which failed to pass, threatened yesterday to split the conference of the American Committee for Protection of the Foreign Born.

The resolution, which precipitated a stormy closing session at the Annapolis Hotel, stated that the committee "regards itself as an American organization devoted to the cause of pure democracy and opposed to forces of totalitarianism of all kinds as being essentially undemocratic."

Only a handful of the 271 delegates voted in favor of the resolution. Most of its opponents who spoke insisted that it was not within the scope of the conference and would inject issues that should not be raised.

"The conference is put in a strange light by its refusal "to adopt this resolution, the Rev. Herman F. Reissig, of New York City, chairman of the committee, declared. "I want to go on record as dissenting from the majority vote," he said. "It merely asks us to state publicly what we state as individuals."

"We're apt to split up a unified body," Irving Novick, acting secretary of the committee, said before the vote was taken. His request that the resolution be referred to the board of directors was shouted down.

Erwin H. Klaus, of New York City, president of the Roland German-American Democratic Society, later withdrew his name from nomination to the board of directors because the resolution was voted down. Klaus, who was born in the United States, spent his childhood in Germany and returned to this country at the age of 18, was a member of the committee which unanimously agreed on the proposed resolution.

Mrs. Lawrence Koenigsberger, of Washington, a representative of the American Jewish Congress, Women's Division, in the debate over the resolution warned that its failure to pass might cause some organizations to withdraw. She said that such a resolution "may be of untold value" to persons who were working for legislation to protect the foreign born.

The 178 organizations, represented by 271 delegates, included 44 trade unions, 41 civil rights organizations, four political and five fraternal organizations, 75 language groups, six professional organizations and two youth groups.

Four Groups Protest

A representative from each of the following organizations immediately asked to be put on record in favor of the resolution against totalitarianism—American Jewish Congress, Women's Division; Roland German-American Democratic Society, Workers Defense League and Workmen's Benefit Fund.

The conference voiced strong opposition to bills which it branded as antialien, stating that about 100 are pending before Congress in addition to State proposals "which would discriminate against the noncitizen."

One resolution urged "immediate defeat" of seven bills, including "the Stranes bill to provide for deportation at any time after entry of noncitizens admitting in writing that they engaged in 'sabotage' or 'espionage,' the Dempsey deportation bill, H. R. 4360, providing for deportation of noncitizens believing in or belonging to an organization advocating 'any change in the American form of Government.'"

The resolution asked defeat for 21 other specific bills.

Deportations Attached

Another resolution stated that the Committee "will actively combat and expose all organized or unorganized efforts to deport individual aliens, whether they entered the United States illegally or on visitors' permits, who are in danger of death, imprisonment or torture if deportation is effected to the country or origin."

The following were elected to the committee's board of directors: Reissig, Leonard Goldsmith, executive secretary, C. I. O., New Jersey; Dr. W. L. Mahaney, Philadelphia Conference on Alien Legislation; Clarence Pickett, American Friends Service Committee; Prof. B. Ostrolenk, College of City of New York; Dr. Leonard Covello, principal of Benjamin Franklin High School, New York.

Leo Upsilanti, Greek League for Protection of Immigrants; Max Yergen, director of International Committee on African Affairs; Franklin Pollak, New York attorney; Edith Terry Bremer, National Institute for Immigrant Welfare; Dr. Charles Petioni, New York, Caribbean Union; Albert Maltz, editor, Equality Magazine; Bertha Josselyn Foss, National Emergency Conference for Democratic Rights; Miguel Garriga vice president of Hotel and Restaurant Workers Union; the Rev. Albert Searle secretary, Greater New York Federation of Churches.

Others Are Named

Carol King, New York attorney; Alan Locke, League of American Writers; Emmett May, Harlem Legislative Conference; Albert Milano, Italian committee; Moses Finkelstein, League for Intellectual Freedom; Edward Corsi, New York commissioner of welfare; Emil Lengyel, author and educator; Harry M. Justig, United Croatian Societies; Martin Popper, National Lawyers' Guild; A. Dwight Bradley, director of Council for Social Action of Congregational Churches; Carey McWilliams, commissioner of immigration of California; Pearl Hart, Chicago Conference Against Anti-Semitism; Luisa Moreno, National Congress of Spanish Speaking People.

Henry Collins, Descendants of American Revolution; M. Lendran, Cigar Workers Union, Tampa; Milton Kemnitz, Detroit Civil Liberties Conference; Max Geline, Wisconsin Conference on Social Legislation; Santos G. Vasquez, Pecan Workers Union, Local 172, San Antonio; Stanley J. Kapa, Polish National Alliance; Albert Sydlow, Packing House Workers Union; Dr. William A. Neilson, president emeritus of Smith College; Mrs. J. Anton de Haas, Chicago; Louis Perlman, United Hungarian Societies; Bernard Harkavy, Jewish Peoples Committee; Joseph I. Paper, Maryland Civil Liberties Committee.

In a resolution the conference opposed "growing discrimination against German-Americans strikingly similar to the anti-German sentiment which existed in the United States prior to its entry into the World War." An amendment cited the possible effect on the teaching of German in the schools and in the playing of German music.

Another resolution urged that "Americans who have returned from service in the recent Spanish War and are being denied admission to the United States for technical reasons be granted the right of repatriation."

Another resolution on the right of asylum, adopted subject to editing, favored amendment of immigration laws to provide that no immigrant should be excluded or deported from the United States because of social, religious or economic views or affiliations.

Another resolution urged that unnaturalized and other foreign-born residents of the United States should not be discriminated against in employment.

Arms Plant Ban Hit

The resolution stated that the United States Government has discriminated against noncitizens, "as, for example, the Department of War has ordered all noncitizens out of plants where orders for armaments are being placed," and that private employers have followed the lead of the Government in discrimination.

Daniel Driesen, legislative representative of the American Communications Association, affiliated with C. I. O. issued a statement for one of the panel discussions yesterday in which he said that the Federal Communications Commission has recommended legislation "giving the commission power to prevent employment of aliens or retention of aliens presently employed in the communications industry." Driesen deplored the proposal.

A message from Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York, read to the conference, said in part: "You may rely upon my continued cooperation in opposing the enactment of the pending un-American antialien legislation."

An attendance of nearly 2,000 for the joint conference of the Progressive Education Association and the Education Association of the District next week-end was forecast yesterday at the meeting of the conference committee.

The group of about 20 met at the home of Mrs. Mary Resh, president of the Education Association of the District. Dr. Mitchell Dreese, of George Washington University, will arrange to have programs distributed in advance of the convention to colleges in and around Washington.

Students from Wilson Teachers College will be ushers at the conference Friday and Saturday at the Mayflower Hotel.

Catholic U. Marks Papal Anniversary

Pontifical Mass Observes First Year of Pius As Church Head

Faith in the world peace efforts of Pope Pius XII was reaffirmed yesterday, as solemn pontificial mass marked the first anniversary of the pontiff's coronation.

Gathering in the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception at Catholic University, members of the Catholic hierarchy, diplomats and legislators heard the Most Rev. William A. Griffin, auxiliary bishop of Newark, praise the Pope and lament the state of the warring world.

Reviews Papal Encyclicals

In the efforts and the social action of the pontiff, Bishop Griffin said, "lies the cure for totalitarianism." Citing the two encyclicals issued by Pope Pius since his coronation, directed toward establishment of world peace, the prelate said of that coronation:

"It is an event which the intervening year has proved singularly providential, not only for the Catholic faithful but for all mankind."

Characterizing the Pope as the great "teacher of truth," Bishop Griffin said that "here lies the remedy for the evils that afflict men and nations in their present lamentable distress. Here lies the cure for excessive nationalism, which forgets that man is a human being."

While March 12 is the anniversary of the Pope's ascension to the throne of St. Peter, the mass was advanced to yesterday because the actual date falls in Passion Week.

Procession Precedes Mass

The Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the United States, pontificated at the mass, which opened with a colorful procession of faculty—members of the university, members of religious orders and priests. For the first time, page boys, garbed in Renaissance costumes, attended the delegate.

Assisting in the services were the Right Rev. Edward B. Jordan, dean of the Catholic Sisters College, assistant priest; the Right Rev. Francesco G. Lardone, professor of Roman law, and Dr. A. K. Zeigler, assistant professor of medieval Latin literature and history, deacons of honor; the Very Rev. James W. O'Brien, assistant professor of moral theology, deacon of the mass; the Rev. Dr. Joseph C. Fenton, department of religious education, subdeacon; the Rev. William J. Lallou, associate professor of sacred scripture, master of ceremonies, and the Rev. Walter Schmitz, of Sulpician Seminary, assistant.

Retired Marine Sergeant Dies

Funeral services for Serg. John McDonald, United States Marine Corps, retired, who died Saturday at his residence, 1017 Twenty-sixth stret northwest, will be at 2 p. m. Wednesday at Wise funeral home, 2900 M street northwest. Burial with military honors will be in Arlington National Cemetery.

A native of Cleveland, Ohio, McDonald served in the Spanish-American and World wars, in the Philippines and in Cuba, in 35 years' service with the Marines. He had lived here since his retirement in 1932.

He leaves his wife, Mrs. Theresa McDonald, and a sister, Mrs. Molly Corby.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

Weird Phantasmagoria Gives Up a Few Items

When, for Example, Are 'Movie Stars' Not? 'Dr. Ehrlich' Runs Around a Few Hurdles; News and Personal Notes of the Theater

IT DOES WEIRD, wonderful and slightly terrifying things to you—fever, a sit-down strike of the nervous system and a sudden seeping away of mental, nervous and physical energy, like the water from a desert mirage. There were, for instance, those three disturbing days when swirling newspaper pages, with their undecipherable type, dissolving halftones, line cuts and cartoons, crazy captions, kaleidoscopic headlines and the like took form in the brain—shall we say?—every time the eyes were closed. Sometimes in incomprehensible English, sometimes in French, sometimes in Spanish, sometimes in Chinese, sometimes in God only knows what. There was something of the motion picture's fade-out and fade-in mixed up in it. Not pleasant.

BELL

But the learned medico knew what it was all about. He had just had a lawyer patient who also had walked around hand-in-hand with the flu for a couple of weeks, had gone to bed and gotten up too soon to take a recuperative stroll across the Taft Bridge on a sunny afternoon. That night his hallucination was that he was walking repeatedly through inexplicable gateways in the railing, leading to three steps and off into the abyss. He thought he was going crazy. I thought I was, too. Probably we both were right.

So perhaps it is a continuing aberration that causes me to wonder why the impending March cavalcade of stellar engagements at the National Theater is being referred to as a parade of "movie stars." They are—as you must know, if I do—Paul Muni in Maxwell Anderson's "Key Largo;" Gladys George in "Lady in Waiting;" John Garfield, Harry Carey and Aline MacMahon in "Heavenly Express" and perhaps one or two others that have escaped a muddled memory. Paul Muni, whose real name is Muni Weisenfreund, was a practitioner of the arts and artifices of the so-called "legitimate" theater from 1908 to 1928 before he ever dabbled with pictures. Gladys George was the daughter of professionals with whom she toured the country from early girlhood until 1920, when she appeared in a Charles Ray picture, only to return to the stage and a career in the parent theater that finally encompassed her triumph in "Personal Appearance." John Garfield came up through the Maria Ouspenskaya school of drama and Eva Le Gallienne's repertory company to many substantial stage hits, among them "Counsellor-at-Law," one of Mr. Muni's conspicuous hits, by the way, "Having Wonderful Time" and "Golden Boy." It was not until 1938 that the Warner Brothers enticed him to the gelatins. The stamp of the cinema is possibly most deeply impressed upon the career of Harry Carey—but he had a long stage training before he ever posed before a camera. Aline MacMahon, after graduating from Erasmus Hall and Barnard College, acquitted herself with comparative glory in such things as "Candida," "Once in A Lifetime" and other stage successes before capitulating to the Warners back in the early 1930's. "Movie" stars?

A little more thoroughgoing conviction is that times have changed. It is "The Story of Dr. Ehrlich's Magic Bullet" that brings this up. Almost 20 years ago to the day, we had as one of our first assignments on a new job the task of "selling" the public on a screen item having to do with the same human scourge with which "Dr. Ehrlich" concerns itself. Because this subject dealt with the taboo topic of syphilis it perforce had to be presented on alternate days to segregated audiences of male and female patrons. Every line of advertising and publicity pertaining to the picture had to be okayed by the United States Public Health Service, which sponsored the film. After two days we were absolved from that rigid requirement, when it became apparent to the powers that were that we hoped to remain in business permanently and not merely for the run of a film that, by present standards, was not only vivid, but shocking and, if I must say it, mildly revolting. That was when the late Harry Crandall's Metropolitan Theater was just emerging as the Capital's foremost motion picture house. I take it that Frank La Falce, presently in charge of the Warner Brothers' advertising and exploitation, has had no such obstacles to hurdle in bringing "Dr. Ehrlich" to the attention of Washington theatergoers. Congratulations.

Genuflections, obeisance and deep gratitude to John J. Payette and his executive associates, of the Warner Brothers, for that mountain of fruit; to Mr. and Mrs. Elmer J. S. Coe and Eddie Plohn, for the flowers; Cousin Mary Mason, Phil and "Kay" Lampkin, Hardie Meakin, "Bill" Fields of the Playwrights' Company; Annie J. Sucrow, Joe Flynn, Phil Stephenson, of "Key Largo;" Nell and Kent Paxton (she used to play organ with Milton Davis, at the Metropolitan, remember?) Ray Bell, my "father," who was in the hospital, himself; Dick Coe and Jerry Gross, for a swell job of pinch-hitting on short notice—no notice at all, as a matter of fact—Katharine Cornell, for a kindly and sympathetic note from Pittsburgh that has caused me to wonder how she ever found out my home address, and to "A. B. C. D.," the greatest bulwark of all in times of need.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, March 3.

BUSINESS DEPT.: As a result of the Burland Printing Co. mess, Gov. Lehman appointed Bernard Botein, the former Assistant District Attorney, to investigate the printing racket . . . Botein set up an office, is hiring a staff, and decided to get the subpoenas, legal forms and official stationery printed . . . He learned, however, that pursuant to regulations, the Burland Printing Co. had the contract to do this official-printing . . . Botein secured a waiver of this rule, and had the printing job done elsewhere.

MUSIC DEPT.: Kurt Weill, the composer, just learned that the rights to his "Three Penny Opera"—the rights owned by a Viennese publisher—now belong to the London publishing firm of Boosey & Hawkes . . . These British publishers had arranged, last summer, to buy the rights to all of Weill's works. After the contracts of sale were signed, Boosey & Hawkes mailed the check to the Viennese publisher, who deposited it. But before it could be cashed war was declared . . . And so the cash, for which that check was drawn, now is on deposit with the alien property custodian in London, pending the determination of hostilities.

THEATER DEPT.: The producers of Saroyan's new play are seeking a pair of girls who resemble each other enough to portray the role of twins . . . Eve Abbott, wife of Keenan Wynn, arrived at Sardi's last night with Templeton Fox. They wore their hair the same way, and had used the same make-up . . . They approached Marian Edwards, wife of Irwin Shaw, and Sydna Scott—both of whom had appeared in "The Fabulous Invalid" . . . "Do you think Fox and I can pass for twins?" asked Miss Abbott . . . "No," Miss Edwards assured her . . . "But why not?" asked Eve . . . "Because," she was warned, "we're going to try for the twin roles too."

MOVIES DEPT.: Gene Autry asked to see the newest script of his cowboy series, which Republic Films produces at a minimum of expense . . . "They tell me there's a big cavalry scene in it," said Autry. "Let's see it" . . . And so he read: "This shot calls for a parade of United States cavalry, as far as the eye will see—or the Budget will allow."

DANCE DEPT.: One of Gertrude Lawrence's friends came to see her performance in "Skylark," and noticed that Miss Lawrence seldom stands in one spot onstage—that she's constantly moving around . . . "Tell me, Gertie," the friend asked Miss Lawrence. "Who's your choreographer?"

LOCAL NEWS: Sinclair Lewis will write the next Judge Hardy picture . . . Yehudi Menuhin, who will play the first New York Concert for the Palestine Conservertoire of Music, is contributing his services, bought the first box, and will pay for his standing room on the stage . . . three name bands will operate at the World's Fair dnace hall, to be called "The Campus," which will charge 25 cents for admission . . . Rae Goetz, the producer, will become head of the talent department for the Myron Selznick agency . . . Orson Welles is getting hunk with the critics, by using their names for his nefarious program characters.

ILLUSTRATED SECTION: The Pinesbridge farm sent a photographer to the Brass Rail restaurant yesterday, to photograph their smoked-turkey display in the show-window . . . The cameraman had to wait until 2 a. m., to get the pictures he wanted—because at 2 a. m., the pickets retired, and before then the cameraman couldn't photograph the window, without getting a reflection of the pickets.

FINANCE DEPT.: William S. Hart, who now is visiting New York, is somewhat puzzled at the delay in the trial of his suit against United Artists. The suit, involving the Hart movie, "Tumbleweeds," was started in 1929, by Hart's lawyers, House, Grossman & Vorhaus. The summons was served by a law-clerk named David Garrison Berger . . . Berger later was admitted to the bar, went into private practice, then into the United States Attorney's office here, returned to private practice—and this week became associated with the firm of House, Grossman, Vorhaus & Hemley . . . His first job is to try the Hart vs. United Artists case.

RADIO DEPT.: Sam Levene, of "Margin for Error," broadcast on the "Pursuit of Happiness" program last Sunday . . . The sketch in which Levene starred first was censored by C. B. S.'s Connie Ernst—daughter of the arch-foe of censorship, Morris L. Ernst, whose recent book is "The Censor Marches On."

War Scenes Still Dominate News Program

The news section of the bill at the Trans-Lux Theater for the current week is one of the most comprehensive offered in recent weeks. Forty-three subjects take you through all phases of the war zones, located in all parts of the world.

British minesweepers are seen plying their dangerous trade through the English Channel; there are thrilling pictures of the latest bombing of Hangchow, China; the cruiser Ajax returns to England, and the crew gets a tremendous ovation. President LeBrun of France visits the British Expeditionary Force on the Western Front; Polish flyers joining the allied forces are signally honored. Special pictures from Finland show the bombing of frontier towns and the harbor town of Abo, and here is shown a U. S. volunteer ambulance corps in action.

Away from war subjects, Secretary Hull appears before Congress, and eloquently pleads for the reciprocal trade agreements. The U. S. demonstrates a new "Dragon Fly," a wonderful observation plane, and another new invention, a remarkable fire extinguisher for aircraft.

And among the sport events, "The Angel," said to be the ugliest man in the world, is seen in his first wrestling bout in America. Several baseball teams are pictured in action in their training camps.

In the short film section of the program, the popular "Information Please" is here again, this time with Deems Taylor, the famous music critic, as guest expert.

The travelog takes you through interesting Holland, while "Screen Snapshots" centers around art in Hollywood. Donald Duck's "Cousin Gus" is the cartoon.

Columbia

Gorgeous Hedy Lamarr and her leading man, Spencer Tracy, move down F street to the Columbia for another week of "I Take This Woman."

The trite tale of a physician, devoted to the cause of medicine and to sweet charity, who marries a social butterfly, rises to the realm of wicked society doctors and unhappiness, and eventually winds up finding the real joy of living back in the slums, is an old one. Spencer Tracy turns in a good performance as the rather dull doctor, and it is to the author of the play rather than to Mr. Tracy that go the scallions for creating so feeble a character.

In the supporting cast, Veree Teasdale stands out as Hedy's brittle, humorous friend. If the picture belongs to anyone, it belongs to Miss Teasdale. Kent Taylor is an appealing villain. Laraine Day is effective as a neurotic suicide who teaches Miss Lamarr a lesson. Mona Barrie and Frances Drake are pleasant and capable menaces.

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, March 3.—Hollywood buzzed today with the academy awards and it was the consensus of opinion that David O. Selznick, who labored for two two years to do right by "Gone With the Wind," deserves the recognition given him. Sitting proudly next to David was his mother, Mrs. Florence Selznick, who still retains the beauty she had when Lewis J. Selznick was a name to conjure with in the movie world. I couldn't help but think how proud L. J. would have been of his son, for it was a great night for the young man who had the courage to battle for what he believed was right.

LOUELLA PARSONS

There were many favorable comments on Bette Davis' fine sportsmanship. She was the first one on her feet to dance and the first to rush up and congratulate Vivien Leigh. Spencer Tracy also proved his fine sportsmanship by getting out of bed to present the awards to Miss Leigh and Robert Donat. There were many outstanding speeches. Vivien Leigh's was in excellent taste, modest and sincere. Douglas Fairbanks, jr.'s acceptance of his father's memorial statuette was, to this writer, a highlight of the evening. Y. Frank Freeman's marvelous Southern accent, Walter Wanger's talk on academy ideals, Darryl Zanuck's splendid speech to the technicians, Sinclair Lewis' fine appreciation of the late Sidney Howard, who won an award; Bob Hope's marvelous unexcelled wit, are all things to remember.

If you don't think Frank Fay is serious about his movie comeback you should see him sipping milk in night clubs and then departing about the time the curfew rings. Frank, today, was signed to play the comedy lead in "I Want A Divorce," the Joan Blondell-Dick Powell opus at Paramount. But the read-headed Fay isn't confining himself to emoting. With his agent, Joe Rivkin, he was on the M-G-M lot recently with an original story under his arm which Norman Taurog is very interested in. They tell me the title of the picture will be the minute the picture ends. For instance, if it finishes at 3:45 it will be called "Forty Five." I still don't know why.

Snapshots of Hollywood Collected at Random: Terry de Lapp obtained his divorce one day and wed Adelaide Title, the next. He is the publicity director of Paramount and she is a nonprofessional; Merle Oberon and Alexander Korda have closed their London house and will bring their furniture to Hollywood when it is possible; Greta Niesen, once a top star in Hollywood, is here to see her mother, who is very ill. She looked stunning when I saw her lunching at the Brown Derby with Guido Orlando; Mary Martin arrived in town in time for the academy dinner but with no trunks, so Edith Head whipped her up a dress in two hours; I had an advance peep at the Ambassador fiesta room where the swank turf ball was held—and what a lot of surprises. Jules Stein, who was in charge of decorations, fealty went to town, turning the place into a miniature race track with many innovations.

The Hal Roaches are entertaining with a luncheon at Santa Anita in the director's room; Sonja Henie, who looks mighty well since her tour, at the fights with Dan Topping, who couldn't have acted happier; Robert Z. Leonard, who loves the races, is calling off work in "Pride and Prejudice," making time up later. His cast and crew are grateful; Agnes Ayres with Hal Strotz at the Bali. Agnes looks well again, which is good news to her many friends; the cutest couple at the whole academy dinner was Mr. and Mrs. Charles Seadler. He is a character actor well past middle age and he and his bride of many years danced every dance.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Atlas

Borah Minevitch's Original Harmonica Rascals opened on the Atlas stage Saturday afternoon to run through Tuesday night. The Rascals' comedy antics and harmonica wizardry completely won the enthusiasm of the packed theater, with 400 people waiting in line to gain entrance to the theater, and could only leave the stage after repeated encores. These boys are tops in their field.

The Rascals are assisted by a sweet singer of songs, Kay Allen, who warbles "Careless" and the hit of the day, "Oh Johnny," in ne plus ultra style.

The double feature screen bill is comprised of Lew Ayres and Lionel Barrymore, in "The Secret of Dr. Kildare," and the latest adventures of the Bumstead family in "Blondie Brings Up Baby."

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, March 3.

Not having enough to do, I started a picture this morning, the second one about the Aldrich family fashioned on that popular radio show, with Jackie Cooper playing Henry Aldrich, which he did in the first, called "What a Life." But here's a surprise. Henry's father, who is pretty hard on Henry, and I think the picture's going to be pretty hard on father, too, because he hasn't acted for a long time. Yet, years ago he was a matinee idol, and one of Hollywood's most famous directors. He did the picture they're still talking about—"Ben - Hur." His name—Mr. Fred Niblo. So, no matter how far away you get from grease paint and the smell of the theater, you always come back to it.

HOPPER

Lately, Fred's been ranching up north. But he's going to be so good in this, it may ope up a whole new acting career for him.

We also have a cute bit of new femininity to the screen—Leila Ernst from Boston. And again Ted Reed directs, so I'll have some swell reminiscenses for you . . .

I love Bob Benchley's story about Moss Hart, who has a peculiar habit of going through his friends' open letters. Of course, his friends have the same habit, but Alex Woollcott thought he'd stop Moss. So had his secretary write a letter addressed to Alex, mailed and it was opened, and Alex stuck it in with a pile of letters unopened and left Moss alone in the room.

Letter was as follows: "I saw your performance of 'The Man Who Came to Dinner,' Mr. Woollcott, and I want to congratulate you on being able to make the bawdy tripe written by Moss Hart and George Kaufman not only amusing but entertaining. You lifted it right out of the tawdry class. Always knew you were clever, but didn't know you had genius." And the letter continued in like vein.

Well, 15 minutes later, Moss came out of the room looking like Ferdinand the Bull when he had sat on a bumble bee. But the Joke was too good to keep, and Alex had to tell him the truth. But it's cured him forever of reading any other letters but his own.

George Musphy, coming back from a hunting trip, stopped off in Searchlight, Nev., and went to a picture show, "Broadway Melody" was on. But the thing that got Murphy was a girl soloist who was singing "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree" with old-fashioned colored slides, and entire audience joining in. They were getting a terrific kick out of it. George says this may be the answer to the double feature evil . . . Give the audience a chance

Who says Hollywood hasn't a heart? Darryl Zanuck has arranged Henry Fonda's schedule on "Lillian Russell" so he can leave in a week for New York to meet his new son. Fonda was bowled over when the baby was born.

Mrs. Fonda called him from the hospital in New York at noon, as was her daily custom since arriving there. In the midst of conversation she said: "Well, I must go now." Fifteen minutes later they called back and told Fonda he had a son. Sure, it was Caesarian . . .

John Carroll says he'll buy no more new cars when starting a picture. When he began "Congo Maisie" he got a new coupe, a truck bumped into it and made it look like an opera hat. When he started "Susan and God" he got another car. The first day out, rounding a corner, he scraped a curb and took off a fender and running board. Well, they tell me walking is good for the chassis, John . . .

Acting Couple

For the first time in several years, Fay Holden, the mother of the Hardy Family series, and her real-life husband, David Clyde, are appearing at the same studio. Clyde was assigned to a featured role yesterday in "Arouse and Beware," starring Wallace Beery. He still thinks it would be a lot of fun to get into a picture with Lewis Stone, his wife's screen husband.

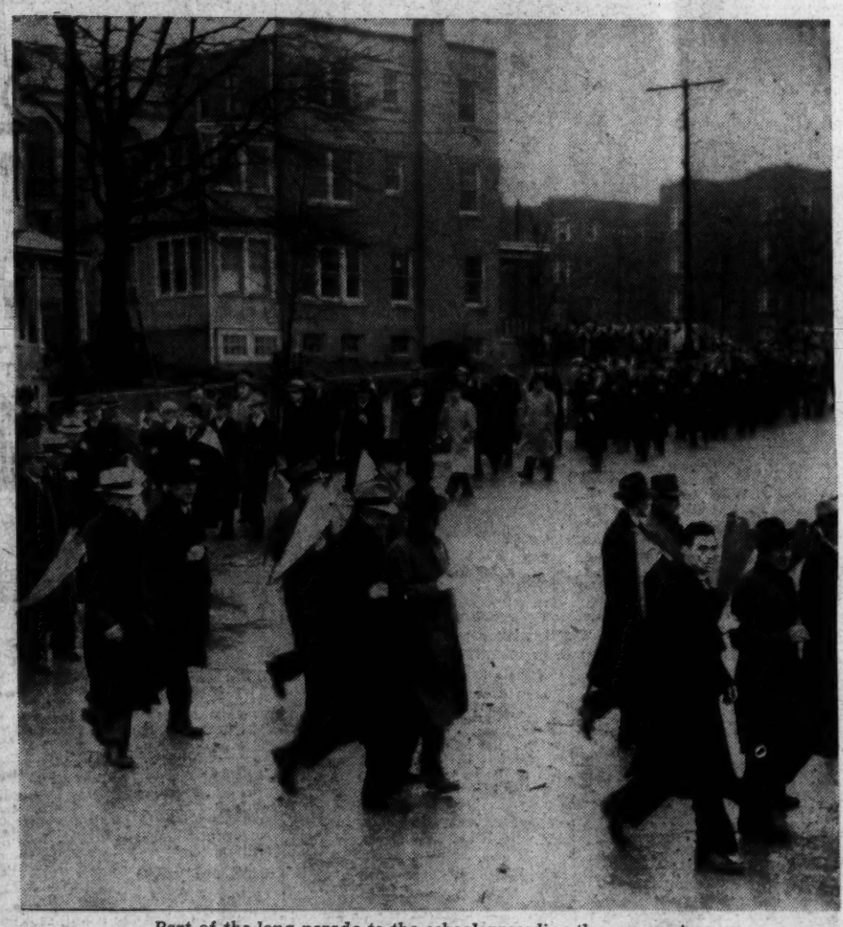
Archbishop Curley comes through the rain for the exercises at St. Francis Xavier School



Part of the long parade to the school preceding the ceremonies

FATHER JOSEPH E. BUCKLEY, rector of St. Francis Xavier Catholic Church and founder of the parish, yesterday heard Archbishop Michael J. Curley pronounce a blessing upon the new St. Francis Xavier School, for which the priest had labored.

Colorful ceremonies surged about the priest and he heard his superiors in the church commend him as a worker of zeal and devotion. He heard the archbishop speak solicitously of his physical well being, saying that "Father Buckley does not take proper care of Father Buckley."

At 10:30 a. m., he left St. Patrick's Rectory, accompanying Archbishop Curley, and crossed the new John Philip Sousa Bridge. Five hundred yards long, the line of a parade was forming, and with their arrival a march was begun, to halt in front of the school at Twenty-seventh and O streets southeast.

Approximately 1,000 persons stood in the rain as witnesses. Marching by were the American Legion Guard, Sons of the Legion Drum Corps, Fort Stevens Post Drum and Bugle Corps, and several hundred men of the parish.

AMERICAN flags and legion colors were formed on either side of the steps and through them the archbishop passed into the building, to be met by 10-year-old Marjorie Barnard, 2932 Fort Baker drive southeast, who presented a basket of flowers.

The archbishop's blessing was given the school, and, returning to the steps, he blessed an American flag, raised above the building by the legionnaires.

The school was the first to be dedicated in the new archdiocese of Washington.

At the solemn pontifical mass in the parish church, both the archbishop and the Right Rev. Msgr. John I. Barrett, Ph. D., LL. D., director of parochial schools for the Washington and Baltimore archdiocese, who delivered the sermon, commended the work of Father Buckley, the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur, of Ilchester, Md., who conduct the school, and Father Buckley's assistants, the Rev. Peter B. Rakowski and the Rev. Harold F. Donovan.

The archbishop commended the people of the parish for their efforts in establishing the school, and Msgr. Barrett urged on them an appreciation of the school's work. Dinner was served more than 100 priests and guests from the two archdiocesses in the school auditorium. Archbishop Curley confirmed more than 350 children at 4 p. m.

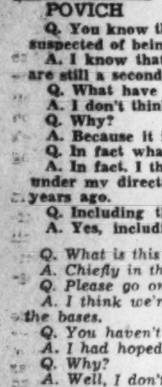
Eagles and River Vale Play 5-5 Overtime Tie

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Orlando, Fla., March 3.—Stanley Raymond Harris took the stand today in the case of the people vs. the Washington ball club and proved a willing and hard-hitting witness for the defense. The transcript of the proceedings reads:



POVICH

Q. How long have you known this Washington ball club, Mr. Harris?

A. Four years as a player from 1920 to 1924, five years as a manager from 1924 to 1928, and five years as manager in a second term from 1935 to 1940.

Q. You know then, Mr. Harris, that last season the Washington club was convicted of committing second-division baseball and thus alienating the support of many fans?

A. I do. To be specific, we finished in sixth place.

Q. You know the charges then? You know that the Nats again are suspected of being a second-division club.

A. I know that there are many people willing to believe that we are still a second-division team.

Q. What have you to say about your 1940 team?

A. I don't think it will finish in the second division.

Q. Why?

A. Because it is a better ball team than the 1939. In fact—

Q. In fact what, Mr. Harris?

A. In fact, I think it is the best Washington ball team I have had under my direction since I started my second term as manager five years ago.

Q. Including the 1935 team that finished fourth?

A. Yes, including that team.

Q. What is this great improvement that you discern?

A. Chiefly in the hitting, but that isn't all.

Q. Please go on.

A. I think we're a better fielding club, and I know we're faster on the bases.

Q. You haven't mentioned pitching, Mr. Harris.

A. I had hoped you wouldn't ask me about that.

Q. Why?

A. Well, I don't like our pitching; at least not yet.

Q. Specifically what is your complaint about your pitching?

A. That is very simple. As yet we do not have enough good pitchers.

Q. How many pitchers do you consider sufficient, Mr. Harris?

A. Four, if they are good ones.

Q. And how many good pitchers do you have?

A. Two.

Q. And who are they?

A. Mr. Dutch Leonard and Mr. Kendall Chase.

Q. And as for the others?

A. And as for the others?

A. Perhaps I had better say I am open-minded about them.

Q. But you do think you have an improved team despite what you call your scarcity of pitchers?

A. Emphatically, I do.

Q. You were saying something about improved hitting? What did you mean specifically?

A. I meant that we have more good hitters on the club, more power.

Q. To whom are you referring specifically.

A. I can enumerate Cecil Travis, Buddy Lewis, Gerald Walker and George Case. They are proven hitters, but there are others.

Q. Name them please.

A. First Baseman Jimmy Wasdell appears ready to hit big league pitching and knock it a long way.

Q. And is there somebody else, Mr. Harris?

A. If Buddy Myer plays second base, we'll have another fine hitter.

Q. Is that all?

A. No. Sammy West, if he plays center field, will hit well. Jake Early may be our best hitting catcher since Cliff Bolton, and Jimmy Pofahl will do very well at bat.

Q. You said something about powerhitting, Mr. Harris.

A. Yes, I did. As I figure it we'll have three potential home run threats—Buddy Lewis, Gerald Walker and Jimmy Wasdell. Three of that type is usually sufficient.

Q. And now about the fielding, Mr. Harris?

A. Let me make myself clear. When I said the fielding would be improved, I was thinking chiefly of last season. Under no circumstances can our 1940 fielding be worse. Last year's was that bad.

Q. Specifically, where do you see the improvement?

A. Chiefly in the absence of Taft Wright from right field. We may miss his bat, but we'll never miss his outfielding.

Q. And who will be your new right fielder, Mr. Harris?

A. Buddy Lewis, I hope.

Q. But he has always been a third baseman?

A. I know it, but he can do no worse than Taft Wright in right field, and he figures to do much better.

Q. And about the other positions defensively?

A. I think Cecil Travis will be a better third baseman than Buddy Lewis ever was. Gerald Walker adds some style to our outfield, besides a good throwing arm. Jimmy Wasdell looks as if he learned how to play the bag. Pofahl strikes me as a brilliant shortstop, and there isn't a poor fielding second baseman in our lot.

Q. You understand, Mr. Harris, that what you say here may be flung in your teeth along about July?

A. I'll take my chances on that.

Seabiscuit, Ex-Work Horse, Becomes Turfdom's Greatest

Track Record Broken, Sun Beau's Winnings Passed, Howard's Horse Idol of the Crowd

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, March 3.—The roar of the crowd at Santa Anita's $100,000 handicap long since had died away in the distance of the Sierra Madre Mountains.

Only a few workmen were about.

Suddenly, from the east end of the long grandstand, came a horse but appealing shout:

"Ha—ray for Seabiscuit!"

Reduced in volume, but still appealing in tone, the voice repeated:

"Hoo-ray for Seabiscuit!"

The voice was heard no more. But it said a lot in two words. For mighty Seabiscuit was the hero, the idol, of that record crowd of 75,000 who saw him run to one of the greatest triumphs of the American turf—victor in the $100,000 added Santa Anita handicap and now the biggest money winner of all time.

Seabiscuit, once a mere workhorse for the Ogden Mills-Mrs. H. C. Phipps Wheatley stable and a $7,500 pickup by Charles S. Howard, of San Franscisco, in 1935, once again was the stake king of the Nation. The champion had come back and won where, twice before, a nose had beaten him out of this rich purse.

Seabiscuit was the winner by a length over his South American stablemate, Kayak II, and a most dangerous rival. A pace setting speed-demon, Maj. Austin C. Taylor's Whichcee, was third in the 13-horse field.

Thirteen was the 'Biscuit's lucky number. He started from No. 13 post position in the 13-horse field.

And records fell by the wayside as the old warrior, with Johnny Pollard in the saddle, conquered that field.

He broke the track record for a mile and one-quarter, running the distance in 2:01 1-5, as against Kayak's mark of 2:01 2-5 set last year; carried high weight of 130 pounds on the journey, and the financial interest—as well as the sentimental backing—of the crowd. They laid more than $70,000 on the Howard entry to win. The betting handle of $1,707,200 for the day broke another Santa Anita record.

The 'Biscuit, given a masterful ride by Pollard, got off third, was never further back than third to the flying Whichcee, and took complete charge of the race as they pounded into the stretch. The issue, following the shout: "—and Seabiscuit is in front," was never

Skeeters Stage Final Period Rally

1,800 Witness First Sunday Afternoon Game At Riverside

By Jack Munhall.

Ever a nemesis, the rowdy River Vale Skeeters yesterday put another crimp in the Washington Eagles' aspirations for second place in the Eastern Amateur League by rallying with two goals in the final period to earn a 5-to-5 overtime tie at Riverdale Stadium.

The tie, coupled with the New York Rovers' victory over Valley Field at Madison Square Garden yesterday, left Washington 3 points behind the Rovers in their race for the runner-up position to the pace-setting Baltimore Orioles.

About 1,800 fans, sampling the first local offering of Sunday afternoon ice hockey, watched the last-place Skeeters come from behind to prevent what had appeared certain victory for the Eagles by a pair of spectacular goals.

Gray-haired Jack McKinnon, 32-year-old center, who joined the Skeeters only a few weeks ago, accounted for the first of River Vale's telling points by slapping a sizzler past Goalie Lester Colvin with a desperate lunge just as he was sent crashing to the ice by a body check.

Score Another

This goal, coming at 7:04, was followed by another ever more exciting little more than a minute later when Hughie Bell smashed through both Washington defense men to take a perfect pass from Center Bill McGregor and then feint Colvin out of position for his counter.

This pair of nifty plays nullified the fine work of the Eagles' forward lines which had displayed some of their best shooting and passing in recent weeks to go out in front. Bill Cairns had given Washington the first of its 3 leads by lofting one over Goalie Gordon Hemming's head while he was kneeling on the ice. Cairns was assisted by Alan Foster and Ken Partis.

The Skeeters tied the count at 1-1 on an unassisted goal at 14:33 by Augie Herchenratter who outsmarted Bill Davies to break through and then capped a fine charge by sliding in a long, sharply angled shot from the corner.

Washington regained the lead early in the second period when Paul Courteau clicked after taking a pretty double pass from Roy Covert and Hal Dewey and then it shot ahead at 3-1 as Covert flicked on the red light, aided by Les Ramsay and Len Burrage, the wily defense who continues to score an amazing number of assists for a player at his position.

Count Deadlocked

Midway of the period the Skeeters again deadlocked the count, scoring twice inside three minutes, McGregor poked one in from squarely in front of the Washington net after receiving passes from Bell and Squee Allen and then big Swanson scored on a 25-footer after bursting through Burrage and Davies.

Washington, however, bounced right back to again snatch the advantage just before the end of the period on a great shot by Alan Kuntz who rifled in a backhander while skating in front of the River Vale net. Dewey and Covert set up the goal with good passes.

Opening the final period Washington took what appeared a prohibitive lead when it boosted its margin to 5—3 as the Dewey-Kuntz-Covert line clicked again, Dewey scoring this time. But then the pesky old Skeeters maintained their jinx as McKinnon and Bell went to work.

The Eagles were the aggressors in the overtime period but they were unable to get a clear shot at the net as Portland, Rae and Swanson checked closely for the visitors.

Little and Hogan Lose In Four-Ball Tourney

Third Seeded Team Eliminated in First Round by Horne and Huot After Leading 2 Up at 19th; Other Favorites Win

By the Associated Press

Coral Gables, Fla., March 3.—The dimunitive Canadian team of Stanley Horne and Jules Huot eliminated third-seeded Lawson Little and Ben Hogan, one up, to interrupt a parade of favorites through the first round today of the $5,000 International Four-ball Golf Tournament.

Horne and Huot, two down after 18 holes, teamed beautifully to come from behind in the day's tightest match.

Ralph Guldahl and Sam Snead, back in the par-shattering form that won the tournament last year, trounced Johnny Bulla and Frank Walsh, 7 and 6. Paul Runyan and Horton Smith, the second-seeded entry, had little difficulty eliminating Lloyd Mangrum and Ed Oliver, 4 and 3.

Jimmy Demaret, the hottest man on the winter circuit, and Willie Goggin romped to an 8-and-7 triumph over Vic Ghezzi and Jimmy Hines.

Set Hot Race

E. J. (Dutch) Harrison and Clayton Heaffner, considered by many the real dark-horse team, set a 12-under-par pace, the warmest of the round, to drub Johnny Revolta and Marvin Stahl, 5 and 3. Heafner closed out the match in sensational style with an eagle 3, chipping into the cup after overhitting the green with a drive and a two-iron on the 550-yard hole.

Walter Hagen and Gene Sarazen, the sentimental favorites of a large gallery, faded out, 6 and 5, before Billy Burke and Craig Wood. National Open Champion Myron Nelson and Harold (Jug) McSpaden walloped Johnny Farrell and Felix Serafin, 7 and 6, but Dick Metz and Ky Laffoon, tournament winners two years ago, struggled to a 2-and-1 victory over Harry Cooper and Jimmy Thomson.

Guldahl and Snead line up tomorrow against Burke and Wood, with Harrison and Heafner tackling Demaret and Goggin in the other top bracket quarter-final.

Also Will Meet

Horne and Huot go against Metz and Laffoon, while Nelson and McSpaden try to stop Runyan and Smith.

Horne and Huot, shooting 10-under-par golf, pulled up even at the twenty-seventh hole. Horne won the twenty-eighth with a par and Huot sent the Canadian team 2-up by chipping in for a birdie on the twenty-ninth. Little's 10-foot putt for a birdie pared the margin to one hole, but the tenacious Canadians earned a half in birdies on the final green to close the match.

The Guldahl-Snead team was 11 below par for 30 holes as they coasted home.

Two nine-hole stretches of 30 distinguished the day's proceedings. Runyan and Smith clicked off six birdies on the secon' nine of their morning round, and Demaret and Goggin whipped out a five under 30 in the afternoon.

Detroit Works For Exhibitions

Lakeland, Fla., March 3 (AP).—With the opening exhibition game only one week away, Manager Del Baker poured on the work today for his Detroit Tigers.

The squad of 38 was supposed to be on hand in full today, but Infielder Charley Gehringer and Outfielders Earl Averill and Bruce Campbell failed to show.

"There isn't a troublesome player among the three," said Baker, "and so I guess we can afford to be a little lenient with them."

Tony Santini Wins Atlantic Sweepstakes

Tops Field of 63 In Baltimore Event With 1,378 Total

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, March 3.—Washington's veteran tournament pinman and this section's leading bowling money winner of the year, Tony Santini, won the South Atlantic Singles championship here today, topping a field of 63 with a 1,378 total.

Santini, winner of the Campbell Sweeps and the rich Dixie tournament earlier in the season, won the $100 top prize with consistent sets of 691 and 687, topping Eli Pickus, of this city, by 13 sticks. Pickus was runner-up with 1,365.

Wilmer Robey, also of this city, was third with 1,354, while Hokie Smith, the Capital City's leading sweepstakes winner of the season, was fourth with 1,330 for $30. Smith has won three of his four tournaments in Baltimore.

Temple Keene, half of the National doubles championship team, and a local alley owner, finished fifth with 1,314, a single stick ahead of Bill Gartrell, of the Washington delegation.

Gartrell led the field at the end of the first five-game block with a 718 count but fell back with 595 in the night session. George Demeres, Fredericksburg, Va., and District bowler, finished ninth, back of Nova Hamilton and Everett Gardner, two of Baltimore's best bowlers.

Fred Murphy was the only Washingtonian among the consolation winners, rolling a 686 set.

New York Sextet Routs Canadians, 5-1; Visitors Lose Series

By the Associated Press

New York, March 3.—A 5-1 victory by the New York Rovers over the Valleyfield Braves, of the Quebec Provincial League, gave the Eastern Amateur Hockey League its second straight Hamilton B. Wills Trophy today by the narrow margin of one game. The Rovers have not lost a game to the visiting Canadian teams in two seasons.

The Braves averted a shutout when Johnny Lapointe bounced the puck off Goalie Braithwaite's stick into the net at 10:44 of the third period.

Bud Foley, Frank Ranniker, Johnny Godfrey, Frankie Boucher and Abby Collings accounted for the Red Shirts' tallies.

Many Title Tourneys Prolong Cage Season

Big Six and Big Ten Races Are Only Ones Still Unsettled; Duquesne Receives First Bid to N. Y. Metropolitan Intercollegiate Event

By the Associated Press

New York, March 3.—Offer most athletic teams a championship and they'll figure the season is over and quit playing. But not so with basketball quintets.

Actually the season is pretty well over—what with only the Big Ten and the Big Six Conferences lacking titleholders, but there is still no concerted rush to put the silky suits into the mothballs.

For there are coveted invitations expected by some and hoped for by all to the Metropolitan Intercollegiate Tournament in Madison Square Garden, to the National Collegiate Tourney's sectional meets and to the regional contests for Amateur Athletic Union teams whose divisional winners will go to Denver, for what Coloradoans like to call the "World Series of Basketball"—the week-long, dawn-to-midnight Men's National A. A. U. Championships.

Newcomers to the list of college conference champions, in addition to Oklahoma's Aggies, Colorado's Buffaloes and Southern California's Trojans, all crowned last week are such superb quintets as Dartmouth's Indians, who captured their fourth Ivy League title Saturday; North Carolina in the Southern and Kentucky in the Southeastern tournaments; the Western Kentueky Teachers, champions of the Southern Intercollegiate A. A. meet; Millsaps, winner of the Dixie conclave; Rice, champion of the Southwest, and Oregon State in the Pacific Coast's Northwest sector.

Unsettled Disputes

That leaves unsettled disputes in the Big Ten and Big Six only, and in the latter it looks as though it may be late spring before either Oklahoma, Missouri or Kansas is declared the winner. The Big Ten winds up Monday with Purdue, the winner if it beats Illinois. Otherwise it shares the title with the victor of the Ohio State-Indiana game.

First specific announcement concerning post season participation came Saturday when Duquesne, winner of 17 out of 18 games this season, was invited to the Metropolitan Intercollegiate Tourney in Madison Square Garden. Several other fine teams, including Rice, Colorado, Oklahoma Aggies, St. John's, of Brooklyn; Marshall, of Huntington, W. Va., and New York University, possibly the country's best team, have received "feelers" from the committee, but no definite invitation has been offered to any yet.

The National Collegiate Tourney, which will be wide open this year since defending champion, Oregon, was bumped by Oregon State, is also lining up teams—and the winner of that tournament, as was the case last year, can hold its head up in any kind of court competition in the country.

The Situation

As the college conferences either wound up their regular seasons or went into the final week, here is the situation by sections:

EAST: Dartmouth did it again. The Indian has only been a member of the Ivy basketball league since 1912 but over that span of years has won four titles, with its last three coming in a row. Saturday's victory over Princeton by 38-36 clinched this season's title. The winning basket was thrown by Gus Broberg, who raised his season's total to a new record of 163. The Indian has another league game and can surpass the team scoring

Tom Chatfield Wins Feature Of Bay Regatta

Danbury Pilot Takes 225 Series in Annual Biscayne Competition

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., March 3 (AP).—Although he could finish no better than third in the finals today, Tommy Chatfield, of Danbury, Conn., won the featured 225-cubic inch hydroplane competition on the twenty-seventh annual Biscayne Bay Regatta.

Hep Cat, a new speedster, piloted by Gibson Bradfield, of Barnesville, Ohio, launched its racing career by forcing the field to trail its wake at every marker on the course, but Chatfield's total of 925 points for all trials gave his Viper III racer a winning margin.

Chatfield won one heat yesterday and finished second in another, which, with his third place finish today, boosted him ahead of Jack Cooper, of Kansas City, in points scored.

Cooper, in capturing second place in the competition, finished second in the finals today and won one of the qualifying trials yesterday. He was forced out of another qualifying race yesterday because of a broken propeller shaft.

Third place for the entire competition went to Joseph Taggert, of Canton, Ohio, on the basis of his third, fourth and fifth place finishes.

A brisk cross-wind prevented the contestants from approaching any record-breaking achievements.

McCoy Makes Costly Error as A's Win

Athletics Triumph Despite 2 Bobbles In 1st Exhibition

By the Associated Press

Anaheim, Calif., March 3.—Bunching six of their ten hits in the first three innings, the Philadelphia Athletics opened their spring exhibition schedule today by scoring a 6-to-3 victory over Seattle of the Pacific Coast League before an overflow crowd of 6,000.

Aided by two wild throws by Benny McCoy and Bill Lillard, Seattle scored all their runs off George Caster in the first three innings, but thereafter was held in check by Herman Besse and Ed Heusser. Besse was particularly impressive, turning in a no-hit performance in his three-inning appearance.

Bob Johnson slammed out three singles in three trips to the plate. McCoy, second baseman who got a bonus of $45,000 for signing with the A's after being declared a free agent, went hitless in two times up.

Before the game Manager Connie Mack announced the A's would return to Anaheim to train in 1941.

Brewers Refuse to Finish Playoff Game After Near Fights

Troy Leads, 32-24, When Action Stops

Both Teams Bicker With Sub Referee; Players Separated To Prevent Trouble

Climaxing two hectic periods punctuated by constant bickering and near-fighting, the Heurich Brewers yesterday qui the floor and refused to finish their American League play-off game here with the Troy Celtics.

The Troy-Celtics were leading, 32 to 24, when Bob McDonald, business manager of the Brewers, ordered action stopped and announced tickets would be distributed entitling the spectators to admission to a return game. He did not say definitely, however, that there would be a rematch.

White Referees

Calling of the game was an aftermath of the retirement of Referee Chuck Soladare in the first period owing to an ankle injury received the night before as he worked a college game.

Umpire Curley White was recruited to substitute for Soladare and from the moment that White assumed authority both teams began to protest. They complained of almost every decision given and twice fist fights were barely averted. The incident which precipitated stopping of the contest was an out-of-bounds ruling against Heurich.

The game itself was closer than the score indicates. In the first period Troy took a 13-6 lead. Play in the second chukker began to get faster and rougher. Troy led 20-17 at the end of the period.

Fleigel Leaves Game

In the last period. Fleigel, of Troy, left the game on personal fouls, closely followed by Phil Rabin of the Brewers. Shots by Bloom and Wilson and one by Dubilier with a foul, ran the Brewers score to 24, while Kupperberg's two goals, one by Chick Reiser, and one by Polcha gave the visitors 32. At this stage the game was called.

After the game McDonald stated that further action on the game will be ironed out in a meeting with President John J. O'Brien of the American Basketball League in New York on Tuesday.

In a preliminary game, D. and H. defeated Petworth in the Heurich Amateur League.

Heurich Loop Play-Off Starts

United Types Play D. & H. Five Tonight

The opening game of the Heurich Amateur Basketball League's championship play-off is scheduled for Heurich gymnasium tonight when United Typewriters, second-half champion, meet Delaware & Hudson, first-half winner, at 9:30 o'clock.

The second game is scheduled for tomorrow night and a third game, if necessary, for either Saturday or Sunday night.

An interesting preliminary to be announced will be inaugurated at 8 o'clock.

United Typewriters were undefeated in the second half and will be favored by many to break the monopoly enjoyed by Delaware & Hudson and Federal Bureau of Investigation in championship play of recent years.

United Typewriters will be represented by a line-up that includes Lenny Mills, Len Stanton, Bill Noonan, Ollie Tipton, Chick Sullivan, Earl ("Ole Mose"- Grove, Soup Hancock and Gay Edelin.

Bobby Lucas, Gerald Burns, Clint Quantrille, Tommy Folliard, Gerald Burns and Pickles Walker will be numbered among the D. & H. players.

Firestones in Victory

Hammond, Ind., March 3 (INS).—The Akron Firestones, already qualified for the National Basketball League playoffs, won a 45-to-39 victory over Hammond today. Goff, of Hammond, scored 13 points.

Nick Fiorentino Meets Buddy Scott Tonight

Joe Turner to Promote First Fight In Five Months at Arena; Italian 6-to-5 Favorite in Heavyweight Bout

Joe Turner celebrates his return to the boxing promotion field tonight with a program at Turner's Arena, featured by a ten-round engagement between heavyweights Buddy Scott and Nick Fiorentino.

Turner, idle as a promoter for five months, believes professional boxing is far from dead here and feels confident of better success wit hthe presentation of big fellows like Scott and Fiorentino.

This match shapes up as a corker, with the shorter but heavier Italian a 6-5 favorite. Fiorentino will enjoy a 15 or 20-pound pull in the weights and is also rated the harder puncher. He boasts a pair of knockouts over Big Jim Robinson, the first of which shattered a 17-match winning streak for Robinson.

Scott, always a popular figure here, is making his first local appearance since drawing with Hobo Williams in a match that established an all-time Arena record with a gate of $3,000. A 6-footer who is on the lean side at 179 pounds, Scott scoffs at reports of Fiorentino's punching ability secure in the knowledge he has never been knocked off his feet.

The semifinal bout will introduce Bobby (Poison) Ivy, clever New England featherweight and protege of Bat Battalino, to Washington fans, with Marcus Pitts his opponent. This is scheduled for eight rounds. A six-rounder will bring together Myron Padlo, stablemate of Fiorentino, and Eddie Finazzo, of Baltimore. Padlo claims he has lost only one of his last 37 matches.

In a second six-rounder Al Gilbert, District heavy, meets Eddie Miller, of Baltimore, and over the four-round route Artie Johnson, Baltimore Negro, will take on Buddy Holmes, of Washington.

First bout will be at 8:30.

Blozis to Get Week's Rest From Shot

Hoya Record Holder Suffering From Bad Thumb on Right Hand

In order to give his highly valued shot-put star an opportunity to recover from a sprained thumb on his throwing hand, Coach Hardell said last night that Al Blozis would not touch a weight until the Knights of Columbus meet Saturday night at Madison Square Garden.

Blozis, who two weeks ago established a world indoor record of 58 feet 8¾ inches, will be making what is scheduled to be his final appearance of the indoor season in Saturday's event.

"I don't know what will come of it," Hardell said, "but Blozis will be given a complete rest this week. He won't throw a shot until Saturday. The rest may help him."

Blozis told Hardell he first noticed his sprained thumb Wednesday in practice and said he believed he had sustained it in the N. Y. A. C. games in the course of his record-breaking feat. Despite this handicap, however, the 248-pound sophomore football player broke the I. C. 4-A meet record Saturday.

Besides Blozis, Georgetown will have only two entries in the K. of C. meet in which every event is an invitation affair. Phil Graves, who reeled off a 4:15.4 mile in anchoring the Hoya 2-mile medley relay team to a new meet mark in the I. C. 4-A games, will compete in either the invitation 1000 or the handicap 1000. The varsity 1-mile relay team will be the Hoyas' other contender.

Hardell refused to explain the faux pas which was reported to have cost Georgetown a victory in the varsity 2-mile relay Saturday.

"There's no doubt that we should have won the race," he admitted, "but I don't want to say anything about it. I think all the boys did very well. MUNHALL.

Hoyas Given Upset Chance Over G.W. Five

Colonials Favored In Wednesday Game At Tech High School

Although George Washington University's basketball team will rule a pronounced favorite, Georgetown University's tossers will be conceded better than an outside chance of scoring an upset Wednesday night when they meet the Colonials at Tech High School's gymnasium. 8:30 o'clock.

On a basis of comparative scores the Hoyas, although defeated in their last meeting with G. W., have shown enough to warrant the wholesome respect of the Colonials.

Not only did the Hoyas upset rmy at West Point, N. Y., after the Cadets had defeated G. W., but they also lost by a scant two-point margin to the same West Virginia team that decisively scored over the Colonials. Georgetown later upset Penn State, a 32-23 conqueror of West Virginia, and also won over Temple University here.

The Hoyas will start Jim Kiernan and Buddy O'Grady, forwards; Jim Giebel, center, and Capt. John Schmitt and Irving Rizzi, guards.

Eastern Five Turns Down 2 Tourney Bids

Blair and Roosevelt Open Metropolitan Tourney Tomorrow

By Bill Burnett

Breaking a precedent of eight years, standing, Eastern High will not be represented in any of the scholastic basketball tournaments outside Washington this year, according to a statement by Principal Charles Hart last night.

The school which has sent powerful fives to the Eastern States tournament in Glens Falls, N. Y.; the Washington and Lee University tournament in Lexington, Va., and the Duke University tournament in Durham, N. C., lost its chance for travel Saturday night when its team dropped a 35-32 judgment to Roosevelt with the interhigh title at stake.

"We have had 'fellers' from Glens Falls," Hart said, "and an actual invitation from Duke, but it isn't our policy to send anything but the best out of town to represent Eastern High. Our tournament action this year will be confined to the Metropolitan event."

Coach John MacBride, of Eastern, revealed at the same time that in Eastern's reply to the Duke bid two weeks ago a strong recommendation of Roosevelt as the District representative had been given. Even then, MacBride said, he had been almost certain Roosevelt was to be the next interhigh titlist.

Roosevelt Silent

As far as the new champions are concerned, however, no bids of any sort have been received. If any have come to the Thirteenth street school, which owns its first crown in 21 years, Coach Herman Littman and Principal May Bradshaw have kept Rider players in the dark about them. The most likely trip, however, will be to Duke.

Washington's only other out-of-town tournament possibilities are St. John's and Gonzaga. The two Catholic high schools have their eyes on the Eastern Catholic tourney in Newport, R. I., during the Easter holidays. Coach Gene Augusterfer, of the Johnnies, admits his team isn't the best tournament choice in the world, however, and Gonzaga's Coach Orrel Mitchell isn't particularly enthused about a prolonged tour during his holidays from school.

With the outside tournament question at a standstill, then, hopes of Roosevelt, St. John's and Gonzaga will hinge on the eighth annual Metropolitan scrap starting tomorrow at Tech.

Riders Meet Blair

The newly crowned Rough Riders launch the affair with a meeting with Montgomery Blair at 7:30, and an hour later St. John's and Gonzaga play the "rubber" game of their annual rivalry.

On Thursday action will be continued when Eastern takes its first step toward defending the Metro title facing G. W. High, of Alexandria. The first half of the bill will be supplied by Washington-Lee and Bethesda-Chevy Chase. An afternoon double-header, involving four as yet unnamed girls' teams, will start semifinal hostilities Saturday at 3 p. m. And at night the Blair-Roosevelt and Bethesda-Washington-Lee winners will come to grips, followed by a meeting of Eastern-G. W. High and St. John's-Gonzaga winners. Boys and girls' finals will be a week from today.

There was a possibility that G. W. High, Northern Virginia titlist by virtue of two successive triumphs over Washington-Lee last week-end, would withdraw from the Metro event if the dates conflict with its Virginia State championship games this week. It will face Newport News and Glass High, of Lynchburg. Coach Al Doran polled his players as to which title would mean the most to them and the Virginia one easily won.

Minnesota U. Wins A. A. U. Hockey Title

Lake Placid, N. Y., March 3 (AP).—The University of Minnesota's veteran hockey six displayed their vaunted power in the final two periods today to win the national A. A. U. championship with a decisive 9-1 victory over Brock Hall, New Haven, Conn.

Wasdell Outclasses Other First Basemen

JIMMY WASDELL

Sent Back to Minors Last Year After Poor Play, Jimmy Appears to Be Answer to Nats' First Base Question; Is Greatly Improved

By Shirley Povich

A Staff Correspondent

Orlando, Fla., March 3.—There is still nothing swan-like about actions of chunky Jimmy Wasdell around first base, but he is no longer the ugly duckling of the Washington club. No longer do they scold the hefty little fellow who last year was finally discharged from the Nats in disgrace.

In this training camp of the Nats, Wasdell is a figure they are reckoning with—meaning the Washington bosses. Disgust toward Wasdell has given way to a gratitude for his presence. Owner Clark Griffith and Manager Bucky Harris not only realize that Wasdell is their only hope of bolstering their first base position, but they are now regarding him as a big leaguer arrived.

There are two other first basemen in the Nats' camp—slender Jimmy Vernon, who did tolerable well for the club in the last half of the season, and big Jack Sanford, who is the property of Charlotte. But Wasdell is the only lad in the trio who promises to give the Nats' first-class protection at the position, and, besides, there's Wasdell's bat.

Wadsell has come a long way since that May day in 1939 when he actually was booted off the Washington club and back into the minors. It was a rare display of temper by the Washington bosses. Ordinarily, big league flops are permitted to quietly pass into the minors without recriminations, but Wasdell wasn't.

To draw the picture finer, Wasdell was given his release shortly after the game in which he booted two balls and made a vitally bad throw. That night he was on the train to Minneapolis.

Clark Griffith was at the end of his patience with the fellow. "I guess he isn't a big leaguer," said the usually tolerant Griffith. A few hours before, Harris had requested Griffith to get that guy off my team. He demoralizes the rest of the club."

Those words are no kin to the tune Griffith and Harris are now singing. They are tolerating no doubt of Wasdell's "arrival" as a big leaguer. They are aroused at any suggestion that he won't be of any help to the team. They've been very deliberate in displaying to Wasdell their confidence in him.

"First base isn't a question mark on this club any longer," Harris was saying today. "Wasdell will give us a good job there. He's a changed boy. His whole attitude is different. He's grim about the baseball business now. It's just a case of a boy growing up. "I never would have believed that such a change could come over a player. He looks like a solid sort of player now. That big year he had in the American Association has given him the confidence he needed. He's swinging his bat now like a real good hitter, and you can't laugh off that kind of power."

Trotting Body Holds Meeting

New Rules to Be Discussed

Goshen, N. Y., March 3 (AP).—The first annual meeting of the directors of the United States Trotting Association will be held at Indianapolis March 11, Secretary Will Cahagen announced today. The directors, chosen by horsemen in 10 United States districts and one in Canada's maritime provinces, will elect officers, make new rules and amend present ones.

In most cases the directors appointed a year ago when the United and National Trotting Associations were merged have been re-elected for 1940.

The principal business to be considered is the amendment made by the executive committee last December which places in the free-for-all class all horses which in 1940 start over tracks of the American Trotting Association, rival sanctioning body which had about 100 race meetings in 1930. Two districts have gone on record as opposing the amendment and three as favoring it.

Indian Spring Club Favors Shorey as Pro

Arthur Porash Confers With Beaver Dam Group But Leaves for Jersey

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

The District's 2 vacant profssional golf posts remained unfilled, officially speaking, last night, but according to reports making the rounds only official confirmation at each club delayed revealing the new mentor.

Athur Porash, former professional at the Summit, New Jersey Club, was on his way back to his Jersey home after a conference with Beaver Dam officials—apparently without the job. Two other out-of-town pros and Al Houghton were in the running and one will be named this week.

At Indian Spring the board of governors will not meet until midweek but all hands pointed toward Mel Shorey, for many years professional at the East Potomac Club, as the new professional.

Al Jamison cleared out Friday for his new job at Bradley Hills and if yesterday's weather had been better, Shorey was reported ready to move in with a supply of equipment to satisfy the day's golfers. He confered with club officials yesterday and Saturday.

Porash, who stumbled on the Beaver Dam vacancy by accident, was in town over the week-end to meet the Beaver Dam officers and stayed with Capital Club pro Tony Sylvester. They attended the Kenwood stag party Saturday and played the Capital Club course yesterday.

Sylvester and Porash worked together under Tommy Armour in Florida in 1926. The New Jersey mentor brought letters of recommendation from Bobby Jones and others, and was touted as an excellent teacher and good club pro. He is a P.G.A. member of long standing.

Porash holds three course records and was runner-up to Craig Wood in the New Jersey Open four years ago. However, it was reported Beaver Dam's committee favored another of the applicants.

Although a dozen pros filed applications for the Indian Spring post, the field was definitely narrowed down to four and Shorey was the favorite.

Should he leave East Potomac, the pro changes in the city, which have a habit of running in cycles, will be increased as the East Potomac job, mainly a teaching one, will be open.

Vince DiMag Seems to Be Better Hitter

Elder of Brothers Busting Fences in Red Training Camp

Tampa, Fla., March 3 (AP).—Vince Di Maggio, the elder brother of the famous family, may have struck out 10 times in a dozen tries last season with the Cincinnati Reds, but he's doing some high-class fence busting in spring training.

Even though the Red pitchers have started to season up their offerings, Vince is catching the ball on the hard spot regularly and getting down to normal on the swinging strikes.

Vince, incidentally, won't ride from the hotel to the field. He says the walk keeps his legs in condition.

Meanwhile, Ernie Lombardi has vowed that the crepe hangers, who wanted him traded after his "beauty sleep" on home plate during the last World Series game, will be shown up this season. Ernie is the first out on the practice field in the morning and the last to leave in the afternoon. He keeps moving all the time and has Manager Bill McKechnie blinking in amazement.

Avalon, Calif.—Manager Gabby Hartnett said today he would take a turn behind the bat when his Chicago Cubs and the other big league teams, training on the West Coast, play an All-Star game for Finnish relief next Sunday.

The Cubs went through a long workout this afternoon with the rookie batterymen getting most of the attention of the coaches.

Pasadena, Calif.—Manager Jimmy Dykes is spending considerable time these days trying to solve the second base problem of the Chicago White Sox. He plans to use Jackie Hayes there if the veteran infielder's trick knee holds up. He also wants Haves for lead-off man.

If Hayes fails to measure up, the plan now is to give Eric McNair, present third baseman, the job and try a rookie at the hot corner.

Fort Myers, Fla.—Infielders Sammy Hale, working out for the first time, whacked out several long drives during the Cleveland Indians' batting practice today, looking as if he would be able to pick up where he left off last season.

Reporting with him were Infielders Hal Trosky, Lou Boudreau and Ken Keltner, and Outfielders Roy Weatherly, Ben Chapman, Clarence Campbell and Del Jones, the latter two rookies.

All but 5 of the expected squad of 39 Indians were in camp tonight. Pitchers Johnny Allen and Willis Hudlin and Catcher Frankie Pytlak are holdouts. Infielder Oscar Grimes is waiting for doctors' permission to work after his knee operation, and Outfielder Jeff Heath is en route by automobile from his Seattle home.

Miami Beach, Fla.—The Phillies were sent through a long batting drill today.

Hugh Mulcahy and Kirby Higbe, the Phils' star pitchers of last season, along with Silas Johnson, obtained in the draft, led the moundsmen as they all took turns in tossing them up to the hitters.

Manager Doc Prothro expects the pitchers to be in shape when the remainder of the Phils' squad reaches camp on Wednesday.

St. Petersburg, Fla.—Pretty good at baseball, the New York Yankees turned their attention to fishing, golf and other activities today as Manager Joe McCarthy provided a day off.

Nothing was heard from the club's three holdouts, Joe DiMaggio, Red Ruffing and Rob Rolfe, except the disclosure by a friend of DiMaggio that Joe had telegraphed from San Francisco concerning living accommodations on the beach for himself and his bride, former Movie Actress Dorothy Arnold.

Clearwather, Fla.—Outfielder Mel Almada accepted terms today and took part in a routine practice of the Brooklyn Dodgers, leaving only Dolph Camilli, Lindsay Deal and Dixie Walker still holding out.

Joe Vosmik's long hits, including a "home run" over the leftfield fence, attracted most of the interest in today's workout.

Peewee Reese, rookie shortstop candidate, was not in uniform because of a slight attack of food poisoning.

San Bernardino, Calif.—The Pirates skipped regular drill today and staged a yannigan contest will all the hurlers taking short turns in the box.

Arky Vaughan's trunk arrived at the training camp, and this as taken as an indication the unsigned shortstop might breeze in tomorrow. Both Vaughan and Pitcher Russ Bauers are expected to be in the fold before the serious work begins Tuesday.

Sarasota, Fla.—Manager Joe Cronin sent his Red Sox charges through a 90-minute workout today with young Dom DiMaggio, brother of Yankee Joe, arriving 24 hours ahead of schedule to join in the drill.

The main contingent of regulars arrives tomorrow and Cronin plans two daily sessions. Lou Finney notified officials he was on his way to the training camp, leaving Pitcher Joe Heving the only holdout problem on the Yawkey roster.

Bradenton, Fla.—Boston Bee players devoted the day to improving their golf as baseball is banned on Sunday by city ordinance, but they will swing into two practice sessions tomorrow as the third week of their Southern drill opens.

Several regulars have been taking part in the drills for the past week and the rest of the crew is due tomorrow to start in earnest on preparations for the regular season.

Post-A. A. U. Tourney Entries Close Tonight

If the number of last-minute calls on The Post Sports Department is any indication, tonight's midnight entry deadline in the annual District A. A. U. basketball championship, sponsored by The Post, should find a record entry in the three classes.

Representatives of the Y. M. C. A., Prince Georges County Boys Club and other quintets picked up a dozen entry blanks for the men's unlimited and 145-pound classes while the number of questions on the girls unlimited class speaks for a capacity field.

Joe Bertolini will officially close the entries at the Washington Boys Club, 230 C street northwest, tonight at midnight.

The draw will be made Tuesday with the first-round pairings published in Wednesday morning's Post. The tournament opens Wednesday night at Heurich Gymnasium, Twenty-sixth and D streets northwest, with appropriate opening game ceremonies to be announced tomorrow.

Weighing in will be confined to the 145-pound class and will be conducted under the supervision of the committee.

Washington Post trophies are being prepared for the winning teams, while individual members of the winning classes will receive gold medals and the members of the losing finalists silver medals.

Additional entry blanks will be available today at The Post Sports Department and the Boys Club of Washington.

Redland Point-to-Point Events First Racing Hereabouts

Four Races Scheduled On Saturday

Norbeck Course Is Scene; Mott Not to Seek Bowl; Play Pal to Run

By Walter Haight

Bowie is four weeks away but fans hereabouts will have a chance to see their first racing of the year in this section next Saturday. True there won't be any mutuel betting, but there will be men, and women too, riding for all they are worth and horses straining every muscle.

As has been the case for five years, the first competition of 1940 will be the program of point-to-point racing staged by the Redland Hunt, headed by T. T. Mott, master of foxhounds. The events last year, starting and finishing at Brooke Johns' place, lured several thousand spectators and this year's edition, weather permitting, should draw an even larger crowd.

That is one of the reasons I will not make my saddle debut next Saturday. On the four-race program is an event for gap hunters and Mr. Mott invited me to ride. Now a "gap race" is not one in which the riders go to sleep like the hare which lost to the tortoise. The race is one without jumps. This fact appealed to me. The riders must find gaps to go through the fences and brush instead of going over them. I thought over the matter of gaps or openings and decided that my horse might get through, but there might be a question of squeezing me in and out. No, I will be a spectator.

Redland Bowl Feature

The feature of the card as usual is the Redland Bowl. T. T. Mott, jr., has won the eagerly-sought trophy twice and would retire if he won for a third time. However, he will not compete this year. Instead, he will ride Rorette, 1938 winner, in the pair race while Miss Judy Johnson will handle Braumanna, 1939 winner.

In addition to the bowl and pair races, two other events will round out the program. There's the heavyweight.

In addition to the bowl, pair and gap races, the heavyweight event, won by Commander Justice Lee last year, will round out the program. The commander will not be back to defend his honors due to Navy duties. However, The Boob, whose sensational race of last year will long be remembered, is scheduled to be ridden by John Richards.

Hazel Welsh and Nancy Hanna, winners of the pair race in 1939, will return to competition in the same event on Saturday.

Welsh Farm Scene

Riders in point-to-point races do not know the course long in advance. The riders will start from the dairy farm of James B. Welsh, near Norbeck, Md. At noon on Friday, the layout of the races will be made known but riders can only walk over them before the races. All the events are at 5 miles, the first race starting at 2 o'clock.

Capt. John L. Horner, jr., is the Redland racing secretary and is accepting entries. After the races there will be a tea at the home of Edward Fletcher, secretary of the hunt.

The much-discussed horse, Play Pal, will compete in the heavyweight race to be ridden either by T. T. Mott, jr. or Miss Johnson. Play Pal is the horse that was judged to have won several races, including a big stake, as a "ringer" for the horse James A. Mr. Mott purchased the horse sometime after the incident and has been unable to race him on the big tracks.

Golden Gloves Champs Start Eliminations

Eastern Stars Open Three-Day Meet Tonight in New York

By the Associated Press

New York, March 3.—Amateur boxing teams representing 13 cities in seven Eastern States, from Florida to New York, begin swinging their gloves in the Coliseum tomorrow night in the Golden Gloves "tournament of champions" sponsored by the Daily News. A. A. They'll fight two nights in the uptown arena, then move into Madison Square Garden for the finals Wednesday.

The survivors of this three-day sockfest will meet the winners of a similar, but even bigger, tournament staged last week in Chicago, in the intercity bouts here March 18.

Teams representing Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, West Virginia, Washington, D. C., and Pennsylvania will face the New York City champions, three New Jersey squads, the Westchester County (N. Y.) champions and two teams from up-State New York.

Most prominent of the fighters are Cyclone Williams, of Buffalo, who has knocked out last year's Golden Gloves heavyweight champion, Buddy Moore; Frankie Donato, Philadelphia featherweight, who holds two decisions over Bill Speary, three-times Golden Gloves winner, and Johnny Aiello, of Philadelphia, former intercity winner.

The boys who are carrying the colors for the District of Columbia are:

Danny Petro, 112 pounds; Jackie Wadsworth, 118 pounds; Gilbert Mayo, 126 pounds; Leo Marcopulos, 136 pounds; John Rogers, 160 pounds, and Jim Brady, 175 pounds.

Jim De Chard, holder of the heavyweight title, and Billy Kekeris, D. C. 147-pounder, did not make the trip.

Seabiscuit Tops Money Winnings

in doubt. Kayak, with Jockey Leon Haas up, charged up on Whichcee, beat him out of the $20,000 second money by a length, with Wedding Call a surprise fourth.

Speedy Specify, Heelfly, Don Mike, RA II, Can't Wait and the rest of the field never figured from wire to wire. It was the 'Biscuit's race.

It was also his thirty-third win in a grueling career. Oddly enough, Sun Beau set his money record with his thirty-third race nine years ago.

The victory brought the 'Biscuit's total earnings to $437,730 compared with Sun Beau's record of $376,744.

Move Over, Man o' War, Sun Beau, Phar Lap and the rest of you turf immortals. Make room for Seabiscuit.

Pirates Buy Outfielder Garms

Bradenton, Fla., March 3 (AP).—Outright sale of Debs Garms, Boston Bee outfielder for the past three seasons, to the Pittsburgh Pirates for an undisclosed amount of cash was announced tonight by President Bob Quinn.

Garms, sent down to San Antonio after a previous major league try with the St. Louis Browns, was drafted by the Bees and played as an outfielder and substitute third baseman. He was a consistent .300 hitter with Boston, but only fair afield.

Hialeah Park Closes Banner Race Season

Attendance, Wagering Show Great Increase At Florida Track

By the United Press

Miami, Fla., March 3.—The fashionable, 46-day Hialeah Park meeting, climaxed by the rags-to-riches story of a doughty little gelding that galloped off with its biggest prize, had a rainbow of wagering and attendance records, figures showed tonight.

Wagering for the meeting—which Leo J. Marks' Many Stings, an unknown a month ago, brought to a smashing finish yesterday by winning the $50,000-added Widenes Challenge Cup—was up 19 per cent. Attendance showed a 10 per cent increase over last year.

Mortimer H. Mahony, in charge of the mutuels department, reported $25,354,406 was poured through the betting windows during the meeting, for an average daily handle of $563,431. Last year the total was $21,283,778, and the daily average, $472,937.

Widener Handle Higher

The handle of $807,819 yesterday exceeded the $744,046 wagered last Widener Day, but fell short of the all-time single day's play of $905,072 last February 24, when a crowd of 24,267 thronged this showplace racing plant for the running of the Flamingo Stakes.

The sharp increase at Hialeah on the heels of a successful early meeting at Tropical Park, which reopens tomorrow for 33 days, led to predictions that the State's cut from legalized betting this year would be $2,250,000, up 25 per cent.

Only 16,093 came out for the running of the Widener, but that was attributed to the fact admission prices were hiked and passes freely distributed the rest of the meeting, were no good yesterday.

J. D. Geddes, head of the admissions department, reported attendance for the meeting was the best in Hialeah history.

Many Stings Provides Good Ending

Many Stings, a handsome red bay 5-year-old, provided a dramatic ending for the record meeting by thundering up from nowhere to grab the $52,000 winner's prize amid a claim of foul, a photo-finish and a dead heat for the show position.

The foul claim was lodged by Jockey George Seabo, riding on Circle M Ranch's Big Pebble, which crossed the finish line a half length behind the Marks gelding. He said Many Stings swerved out at the final furlong pole and broke his mount's stride. The claim was disallowed.

Four lengths behind Big Pebble came Mrs. Payne Whitney's Day Off and Mrs. E. L. Martin's Supreme Sir in a dead heat for the show position.

Many Stings, whose only previous claim to fame was winning the McLennan Memorial two weeks ago, was the 7-2 favorite in the field of 156, which lacked a standout horse, and paid $9.10, $5.40 and $3.60. Big Pebble returned $9.80 and $6.30. The show price on Day Off was $3.50 and on Supreme Sir, $3.20.

Bill Bennings

Selections at Tropical Park

Dear Al:

Well, Confucius was right in there knocking. The old boy was consistent, if nothing else. His picks in the big races were Big Pebble and Whichcee, and the jockeys of both horses claimed fouls. However, both were in the money, and neither was chalk. We have to take our hats off to Brother Seabiscuit. They simply took the bandages off and he galloped. When he dies they probably will find that his heart runs from his backbone to his belly and from his neck to his tail. Well, the Wireless Windbag Contest is coming along in good style, and I received a good batch of rhymes on Art Brown in yesterday's mail. If you haven't been reading the column lately, I'm offering a badge for the entire Bowie meeting (tax paid) to the reader who sends in what I consider the most clever four-line rhyme with Brown as the subject. The contest closes on March 20. There are no strings attached. No blanks are needed. Just dash off four lines (four clean lines) and mail them to Bill Bennings, Washington Post. From the way they are coming in I might have to call in Arch McDonald and Arthur Godfrey to help me with the judging. Don't be bashful. Just tune in on Brown's morning program over WOL and get a load of that hookum and you won't need further inspiration. I'm going to use initials with those I put in print. Here's one of the best of yesterday's crop: "You hear him on the radio, at the theater, track or fair; While Bennings dishes out winners, Art Brown dishes out hot air." It is from R. B., Chastleton Hotel. Can you beat it? Confucius say: "Whisper, small on talk, big on speed." BILL.

First Race—I'm going to take a shot at Dr. South in this rather open affair for maiden juveniles. He has a creditable race as a recommendation and appears to be the improving kind. Hi Pov and General Jack have high figures and would battle it out if the top one fails.

Second Race—Taut is down on the also eligible list but would have to be dealt with if in action and is too good to be disregarded. Fight On is a fair sort and belongs in this company. Rhett could be third.

Third Race—Wise Decision has been going in excellent form and deserves the choice in this field. Woodsia probably did not like the other course. Let's see what the change of scenery will do for him. Epical failed last out but is a threat.

Fourth Race—Equistone gets another chance in this. Perhaps I'm putting him a bit too high, but I'm forced to string along at least once more. Town Boy packs plenty of punch. Ship Biscuit could take it all with a little improvement.

Fifth Race—Mucho Gusto comes back to the track he loves and I'm going to take my chance with this veteran. Bucking is good now and likes the route. Cardinalis and Bull Whip are possibilities.

Sixth Race—Moonfolly is tossed in this with 103 pounds and the rail position. Could upset such good campaigners as Gay American and Bright and Early.

Seventh Race—Lady Infinite has been rested. She goes postward for this with a mere 100 pounds or as near to that mark as Apprentice Packer can make. She may make it a front-running victory. Modern Age won for us at the other town. Pumpgun for the minor award.

Eighth Race—Blackmail looks like the right one in the finale. Needs only the right handling. Fly Me is good and could surprise. Diabroom may have had too much of it of late.

Substitute Race—If this event is used, I'll take High End, Googles and Red Chief.

Best Bet—Wise Decision.

Maryland Breeder Perplexed As 33 of 35 Foals Are Fillies

Dr. Adams' 'Gal Horses' Came 29 in Row; Hopes 1940's Will Chase Jinx at His Farm

What is believed to be some sort of a record—perhaps a world's one—has been established at the thoroughbred nursery of Glen Wild Farms, Catonsville, the property of Dr. J. Fred Adams and J. Fred Adams, jr.

Beginning in 1931 29 consecutive filly foals were dropped over a span of 7 years at Glen Wild, but the female streak was broken with the arrival of two colts in 1938. They, however, were followed by four more fillies.

It is only natural that the Adamses are glad that the forties are here and that the thirties are history.

Dr. Adams will race a stable of approximately eight 2- and 3-year-olds this season, while his son will look after about as many steeplechase horses. Like in recent years the Adams establishment will not be hurried for the early campaign in Maryland, but will be brought along slowly. Particular attention will be paid to the two juvenile chestnut colts, both by Rehoboth, one being out of the well-bred mare, Mary A, which has a double cross of Fairy Gold, and the other out of Tacy C.

Rehoboth in Demand

Dr. Adams reports that Rehoboth is in considerable demand as a stock horse, as he is one of the few Sun Briar stallions in the country in stud service. Rehoboth's dam is Lazuli, by Knight of the Thistle, another grand producer. Lazuli, when her racing days on the flat were over, developed into a splendid cross country horse and won frequently before she was retired to the nursery. She was the foundation of the Glen Wild stud when Dr. Adams turned to breeding.

So far as known Glen Wild Farms possesses alone two stock horses by famous sires. In addition to Rehoboth the other is a Man o' War stallion—War Gain, out of Mary A. Mary A is by Fair Gain and Lazuli and only 7 years old. Dr. Adams believes she will replace Lazuli as the best brood mare on his farm.

Young Adams will have his stable of leapers ready for Pimlico, and then will make Delaware Park, Belmont and Saratoga during the early part of the season.

It is not generally known that Dr. Adams refused $120,000 for four of his thoroughbreds at one time or another. Glen Wild, by Meridian, a Kentucky Derby winner, and Lazuli, was the best horse he ever bred and his death at the end of his 3-year-old career was a distinct loss to Maryland in 1929.

Won the Riggs

Glen Wild closed his racing career by winning the $25,000 The Riggs, at a mile and a half at Pimlico on a muddy track, when he defeated Joseph E. Widener's Curate. He refused $60,000 for him. He also turned down $20,000 for Lazuli and the same amount for Gracie, her daughter, which won the first running of the Billy Barton Steeplechase at Pimlico. Gracie now is producing winners.

After Rehoboth showed that he could run a mile in 1:36 and three-quarters in close to 1:10, Dr. Adams was offered $20,000 for him, but he preferred to keep the son of Sun Briar for stock purposes.

When Dr. Adams' Adamite won the Maryland Futurity in 1933 he became the only sportsman in the country to carry off three of Maryland's most popular stakes. A $1,000 gold cup made in England was added to The Riggs at that time. And, speaking of trophies, Dr. Adams has a trophy room filled with them that he has won on many tracks in the country.

35 Years In Sport

Dr. Adams has been actively engaged in racing for 35 years and is a charter member of both the American Trainers' Association and the Maryland Breeders' Association.

Rehoboth, the horse, was named after Rehoboth, the town on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, the birth place of Dr. Adams. His father was a physician before him.

Dr. Adams was educated at Rehoboth Academy, Pocomoke High School, St. John's College, where he received two degrees, and the University of Maryland Medical School. Before giving up his practice about 20 years ago he was connected with the United States Health Service and for 14 years was assistant professor of surgery at the University of Maryland.

Orioles Turn Back Sea Gulls, 4 to 1

Baltimore, March 3 (AP).—Baltimore handed Atlantic City's crippled Seagulls a 4-1 beating tonight in an Eastern Amateur Hockey League game.

The Gulls had only 11 players dressed and one was kept on the bench by a foot injury.

Baltimore scored in every period, gaining a 2-point lead in the first and easily holding the margin. A fight, started when Dyte and Groom began swinging in the second period, enlivened the game.

Bruins Are Beaten In Wild Game, 6-3

Detroit, March 3 (AP).—The Detroit Red Wings buried the Boston Bruins, 6 to 3, in a wild National Hockey League game tonight in which practically everything happened.

One of the victors' tallies—in the second period—came on a whistling penalty shot from the stick of Modere Bruneteau, first to be counted on Detroit ice this season.

Boston got out in front, 1 to 0, in the opening period on a fine goal by Woody Dumart, but the lead wilted in the face of the strongest attack the Wings had shown at home all season.

McElligott Named 3-Cushion Referee

Chicago, March 3 (AP).—Charles McElligot, of Chicago, was named referee-in-chief today of the 1940 world's championship three-cushion billiard tournament which begins March 11.

Construction Orders Stem Steel Decline

Production Rate At 65½% at Start Of Current Week

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, March 3.—Big construction orders aided the steel industry today as the recession in production slowed to the smallest rate of decline in five weeks.

The magazine Steel's national survey reported production at 65½ per per cent last week, a drop of 1½ points from the previous week. For the same period a year ago the rate was 56 per cent.

"The recent decline appears to have been definitely checked," the magazine says. "But orders still are short of production and some districts will curtail operations further this week."

Structural orders jumped last week to the highest level of the year. Big projects included 13,250 tons for a Queens (N. Y.) viaduct; 11,000 tons for a Rockway (N. Y.) grade crossing, and 6,300 tons for a Washington (D. C.) War Department building.

Impending announcement of second quarter prices is arousing little interest because extension of present figures is expected. Steel says orders for 1,000 railroad cars were placed last week.

Fill-in purchases are increasing, pointing to continued reduction in inventories," Steel says.

District production rates were: Cleveland, 71 per cent, up 3 points; Detroit, 94, up 2; Chicago, 59, off 4½; eastern Pennsylvania, 65, off 3; Buffalo, 58, off 9; New England, 56, off 7; Cincinnati, 87, off 2.

Unchanged were: Pittsburgh, at 63 per cent; Youngstown, 40; Wheeling, 94; Birmingham, 90, and St. Louis 63½.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

After watching nine sessions of the Eastern contract bridge championships, we have come to the conclusion that even tournament players could stand a bit of checking up on their bidding and play. Therefore, this quiz, compiled from problem hands presented in "The Bridge World."

With East-West vulnerable, the bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 NT	Pass	2 ♡	2 ♠
2 NT	Pass	3 NT	?

On each of the following hands you are South. What action do you take?

1. ♠ Q J 10 9 8 / 6 5 2 / ♡ 5 3 / ◇ Q J 10 / ♣ none — Bid.....
2. ♠ K Q J 10 2 / ♡ K 5 / ◇ Q J 9 / ♣ 10 5 2 — Bid.....

With both sides vulnerable, the bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
3 ♠	Dbl.	Pass	?

On each of the following hands, you are South. What action do you take?

3. ♠ Q 4 2 / ♡ Q 6 3 / ◇ K 10 8 5 / ♣ A 7 4 — Bid.....
4. ♠ A / ♡ K 10 8 5 / ◇ A J 9 3 / ♣ K J 8 4 — Bid.

Answers to Quiz

1. Four spades: A defenseless hand, this bid is made for the purpose of taking a save. It is true that with a trickless dummy the penalty will be 500 points, but in that case the opponents will have a sure game and probably slam. It is unlikely on this bidding, however, for opponents to have slam aspirations and, therefore, it is reasonable to suppose that partntr has a trick. If this trick materalizes, then the penalty will be only 300 points; unquestionably a good save.

2. No bid. Having bid spades at the two level, your partner is sure to open that suit, thereby giving you an excellent chance to defeat the contract. To double, the only other conceivable action, would risk too much. It would enable the opponents to reach a possible sounder four-heart contract. It is also possible that West holds the ace of hearts, in which case the opponents would make overtricks at a doubled contract.

3. Three no trump. In this case, also, you should be able to defeat three spades, but now you have an excellent chance to go game in no trump. You have honors in every suit and a sketchy but probably effective spade stopper, inasmuch as there seems to be little chance that East can gain the lead to come through your queen of spades.

4. Four spades. This cue bid in the opponent's suit is by all odds the most intelligent and constructive action you can take. You have a splendid hand with excellent support for three suits, and if your partner's take-out double was sound, you should easily be able to make a slam in the best fitting trump suit. It would be silly, however, for you to try to select that trump sul from among your three four-card suits—it is infinitely wiser for you to ask partner to declare himself and then to support his bid.

Today's Radio Highlights

Andre Kostelanetz conducts his 45-piece orchestra in a fragment of Sibelius' "Finlandia" on his "Tune Up Time" broadcast. The chorus, "O Singing Land," is the climax of the mounting crescendo in the Finnish composer's great tone-poem—WJSV, 8 p. m.

Margaret Speaks returns to her Monday concert, replacing Richard Crooks. She sings Friml's "L'Amour, Toujours, L'Amour," "Night and the Curtains Drawn," by Ferrata, "Il Bacio," by Arditi, and Victor Herbert's "Thine Alone." The orchestra offers Von Suppe's "Poet and Peasant" overture, Albaniz's "Malaguena," and Brahm's Hungarian Dance No. 1—WRC, 8:30 p. m.

Joan Bennett and Ralph Bellamy, who starred in the film version of "Trade Winds," are joined by Errol Flynn and Claire Trevor in a radio adaptation of the same play. The story, by Tay Garnett, is a mystery against a moving, tropical background—WJSV, 9 p. m.

Alec Templeton, the blind pianist, plays "Last Night's Gardenias," in his own unique style, assisted by the William Miller chorus and Daniel Saidenberg's orchestra. Other numbers programmed for Templeton time include "Le Petite Negre," as the pianists classic solo, and "Friendship," sung by Pat O'Malley, the comic—WRC, 9:30 p. m.

Congressman Robert F. Jones, of the Fourth District of Ohio, speaks on the subject, "Americanism," over the Mutual network—WOL, 11:15 p. m.

with Slocum

About the time I tossed my Dick Merriwell and my Rover Boys literature into the uninterested hands of my brother, a gentleman named H. L. Mencken was going through one of those periods when American literature had decided he was something of a fraud. He had recently ceased being the whitehaired boy of the racket.

A few years ago I was torn between a handy copy of "Mencken's American Language" and a Gideon Bible. My finer instincts set me on the Bible, but the fact that the light was poor and the print small turned me to "American Language." The type in that was pretty small at times, too, but it didn't matter after a while and Mr. Mencken had another customer.

Saturday Mencken was up to WJSV, and while I wasn't up to getting out of bed to meet him, I did take the three empty Coca-cola bottles from in front of the radio and listened to Miss Vesta Eales interview the sage of Baltimore.

It was a classic in how interviews on the air should be run—if I know how they should be run and there is no reason to believe I do know, or that I don't know. Miss Eales asked the questions and Mr. Mencken answered 'em. Miss Eales' questions were few and brief, Mr. Mencken's answers were long, unimportant opinionated and great listening.

He said, for instance, that he visits Washington often and "finds it the most interesting of American cities, mainly because there are more frauds in it than in any other." Mr. Mencken has obviously never visited my native Great Neck, L. I., but it was great to hear an intelligent answer to a prop question instead of the customary "I just love (insert name of any city)."

He was pretty bitter about his native Baltimore, ecstatic about parades and extremely unhappy about the fate of baseball in this country and its rise in Japan. He pointed out that as the national game of the United States gradually ceases to be the national game here and increases in popularity in Japan there is more proof that as Japan goes up in the world the United States goes down.

He can bet me he can't prove that last one but it's a thought.

"I Take This Man"

BY ANNE TEDLOCK BROOKS

Chapter 18.

AFTER SHE had arrived at the Winships, and gone up to her room to touch up her hair a bit, Brenda realized that it was a larger party than she had anticipated. There were many of the old crowd there.

Tonight she was wearing a new formal. She had not bought any since her return from Rio. She had not wanted to dress up—but now, she told herself that others, too, must know hat Alan and Margot had gone on a cruise. She must try to appear happy and gay.

Brenda had a cocktail with several of the guests and looked tolerantly over the group. Months ago, yes, long over a year ago, she had felt ill at ease with them. But now—she could remember a certain night at the opera in Rio when she sat in the Cruze box. All of the admiration that was thrown her way was not for the diamonds, as she had so modestly written Alan in her letter that night.

Brenda was beautiful tonight and her sister-in-law, Pixie Tremaine, ran up to her and kissed her when she came in. "Oh, Brenda, you're looking wonderful," she cried.

Back of the peacefulness that lay like a mask on Brenda's face, was the haunting wistfulness of her eyes, Pixie could not forget them. She watched her a great deal during the evening. But Brenda seemed to be gay and casually bantering. Her white shoulders rose above the blackness of shirred velvet, and her cheeks were flushed from the cocktails. Her black hair was swept off her wide, clear brow, and she looked older than Pixie thought she should.

After dinner the party divided into groups. Some one introduced a new and very silly game that they played with bridge cards, and the laughter and merriment grew.

What She Overheard

Once Brenda slipped out to go to the powder room, and while she was there she heard two of the women speaking.

"Isn't that black-haired girl Alan Tremaine's wife?"

"Yes, of course! We met her the first time long ago, when Alan came in at the party from the Winships' dinner—you remember. He took her home. He fell head over heels in love with her at first sight."

"That's what I had thought. But I can't understand why she is here and Alan and that Alexander woman are on a cruise together. I'm afraid there's going to be a divorce over that. I've had an amusing letter from Ted. He says that Alan and Margot are like they were years ago, when they were engaged."

"Margot was so terribly upset because he married this girl. Do you suppose that Alan's sorry now? You know, he was so desperately in love with Margot!"

"It's a funny world. You never can tell . . ."

Brenda had not meant to hear, but she was rooted to the spot. Of course, they were all feeling sorry for her, they all knew about Alan and Margot.

She turned and fled, going up the stairs quietly to the room that she was to occupy. She simply could not go back down.

Divorce? That had never occurred to her.

Did Alan want his freedom to marry Margot? Brenda sat down by a window and leaned her head in her hands. If he did, then she must be agreeable.

It seemed nours later that Brenda heard the guests leaving. She was ashamed that she had not gone back down. Lynne would feel badly about it, she thought.

She sat in the dark of her room until she heard Lynne's tap at her door. She turned on a low lamp and opened it. Her face was white and tear stained.

"Brenda, you are ill?"

"Come in, won't you? I must talk with some one. Lynne, I can't go on this way. I'm going to write to Alan and ask for a divorce." Her voice was filled with anguish she had suffered during the last months. "A divorce, Lynne, that is the only way out."

The day after the Winship dinner party, Brenda felt as though everything were finished. She had heard the words of the women in the powder room last night all too clearly. Alan and Margot were just as they were when they had been engaged. They spent every moment of the days together on board the yacht. And half the moonlit nights.

She had been unable to stay at her office the entire day and left early. The thing that she knew she must do was to write one more letter to Alan. She would address it to him in care of Senor Cruze at Rio. Surely Alan would keep in touch with him. This letter must reach him, and not be returned as her first had been after he had gone back.

Marta, the maid, was staying at the apartment sleeping in the baby's room, so that she could care for him if he were wakeful at nights.

Marta was alarmed at Brenda's appearance when she came in. Brenda did not eat anything, taking only a glass of milk and tasting her salad.

Writing a Letter

Later in the evening Brenda sat down at her desk in her own room. She had closed the door, because the letter she was going to write would take her fullest concentration. She could not think how to start it, or after she began, what she must say. Alan did not yet know that they had a son.

Many times Brenda had debated the question of telling him, but always her decision was against it. He must not feel that Alan, Jr., was the responsibility to tie him to her. And now, if he cared again for Margot, he must not know about the baby until after he had decided about the divorce.

She made many beginnings, but the crumpled balls of notepaper lay littering her desk before she found words to say what she must tell him.

Pixie found her three. It was a cold night and Pixie was wearing her furs. Her usually animated face was quiet and soberly grave. She came in after a soft tap at Brenda's door. She saw that the girl's task of writing must be difficult, and she saw Brenda half shield the letter with her arm, unconsciously.

"Brenda, I've come to beg of you to release me from your promise."

"Why, what do you mean?" Brenda felt dulled from thinking, and Pixie's words were not clear.

"I want to write to Alan. I want him to know about you and the baby." Pixie's blue eyes filled with tears. "You see, I have been so happy lately in my plans for the future that I can't bear to know about you and Alan." She held up her engagement finger and the ring it bore glittered under the lights.

"I'm glad for you, Pixie. I'd hoped that you'd soon tell me about it. But you must not worry about me."

Brenda rose and drew a chair forward. She took Pixie's coat and offered her a cigarette.

"I know that Margot and Alan are together on the cruise, Pixie," she went on. "You needn't try to keep it from me. I know what people are saying . . . that if it weren't for me they'd probably marry." Her voice was under perfect control. "And you see, Pixie, I'm going to make it possible for Alan. This letter is for him."

Pixie's Secret Plans

Pixie ran to her. "Oh, don't do anything so foolish as that, Brenda! Don't you know that Alan loves you? I know that Margot is not the woman for him. Even when they were engaged we all felt sorry for him. Because all that she could ever do would be to stifle his ambitions, to use him only as an amusing escort to show off her canity. You can't do this."

Brenda looked at her curiously. "But you surely don't think I can go on this way. Never knowing where he is, knowing when he is in danger or ill, and yet I'm his wife." She rose and crossed the room, her back to the girl. "You don't know what it is, Pixie, to have had a chance at happiness and let it go by you. You must not reproach Alan too harshly. It's all my fault."

Pixie looked at her pityingly. There was so much more to this than she would ever know. All that she understood now was the fact that Brenda loved Alan and that she had suffered through his treatment of her.

"If I had never left Rio, then this would not have happened. I should have stayed there like a good, dutiful wife. But I never dreamed that Alan would care."

"Ah, but you don't know him, then. He loves you so madly that he could not understand why you should not be there waiting for him."

But Brenda could not tell her that the real reason why Alan had gone back without her was because he thought she still loved Cary Winship. That secret others must never know.

After a while, Pixie left. As she went down in the elevator of the building, she resolved to do something about it all.

Brenda, back in her room, reread the letter to Alan again. Even after it was written she could not be sure that he would receive it for a long time. The room had grown chilly. She put on her flannel robe, went out to the fireplace and built up the fire.

She sat there thinking of her marriage, remembering the gay boyishness of Alan. Remembering their marriage back in the little town where they had found an old-fashioned inn and spent the week-end. It all came back to her . . . the ground covered with fast-falling snowflakes; the pleasant minister's family; the coldness of their rooms at the inn the next morning, and Alan's happiness.

Alone With Her Letters

About 2 o'clock Marta went out to the little kitchen to get Alan's bottle. She saw the glow of the lamp in the living room. Brenda was asleep in the big chair. Alan's packet of letters he had written at the Morro Velhoe, surrounded her. Marta gave a sharp exclamation, and hurrying to Brenda's room, turned down the covers. Then, with strong arms, she picked up Brenda and carried her into her bed. She was amazingly light.

Brenda opened her eyes. "Oh, Marta!"

"A pretty time of night for you to be sitting there, with the fire out. You'll catch pneumonia," Marta scolded.

Brenda slept late the next morning. Marta was alarmed over her. A few weeks back she had thought that Brenda was looking much better.

Brenda sent the letter to Alan by air mail; it should be in Rio by the time he returned. Going directly to Senor Cruze's house, he would get it to Alan immediately if it were possible.

Alan's Decision

On the yacht Alan Tremaine did not appear on deck at all the evening that Morgot went to his cabin. He realized that she was very near tears and he managed to get her back to her own room. He succeeded in dimissing her entirely from his mind. At first he felt conscience-stricken because he knew that he had given Margot cause to believe that he cared for her again.

Later in the evening, he went to the cabin in his quarters.

"Where is the nearest port that I can take a plane back to Rio?" He hated losing time, but he could not go to New York in summer clothes.

"We're putting into one tomorrow about noon," the captain said briefly. "Paramaribo. Fly from there back to Rio."

Alan slept soundly for the first time in months. He awakened with a sense of peace. He packed his belongings quickly. He would leave the yacht with as little fuss as possible, thanking and making excuses to his hosts too late for them to try to dissuade him from leaving. His lips twisted when he thought of Margot. She would hate him at first, then she would know that he must always love Brenda. To her he must give credit for bringing him to his senses.
